What makes us open wide and say "Ahhhh"?

New York Magazine's naming 26 Stony Brook physicians as "Best Doctors in New York," that's what. As every true New Yorker knows in his heart, we've got the very best of everything. The best jazz, theatre, architecture, you name it. And yes, that includes medical care.

So when New York Magazine chooses only 1,358 physicians as Best Doctors, that means something. And when a full 26 of those great M.D.s are from Stony Brook, it means even more.

Because our Best Doctors are 26 more reasons Stony Brook University Medical Center leads the way in routine, everyday care, and in spectacular surgical breakthroughs.

So check them out: New York's Best Doctors of 2006!

Wine's Journey

How a Bottle of Wine, After 11 Years, Finally Got Drunk

By Dan Rattiner

"There's someone downstairs who'd like to see you," the receptionist said.

"Who is it?"

"His name is Carlton. Says you ran one of his paintings on the cover of the paper last month and he'd like to thank you."

"Send him up."

Carlton appeared. "I have a present for you," he said. "So many people commented on the cover. It's made a big difference in my career and I want to thank you for it."

Carlton presented me with a gift-wrapped bottle with a bow on the top.

"It's a Cabernet Franc," he said. "From Jamesport Vineyards. Their finest."

I shook his hand and thanked him and he left.

That Saturday night, I attended an intimate dinner party thrown by a real estate agent who is one of our advertisers. I brought the bottle of wine.

"It's a fine Cabernet Franc," I said.

"Thank you so much," she said. And then the caterer had a question about something and she was gone.

At the end of the evening, the caterer, as part of the cleanup, locked the bottle of wine in the liquor cabinet. They finished their work and then they left. It was about midnight.

At two in the morning, the sixteen-year-old son of the agent came into the house while everybody was sleeping and, instead of going to his room as you might expect, went to the liquor cabinet and unlocked it with the key which he knew was kept on the hook behind the cappuccino machine. He took a bottle of scotch and a bottle of red wine. And he also took the gift-wrapped Cabernet Franc.

A year later, this rich client draped a diamond necklace around the gold gift wrap of the Cabernet Franc, drove out to visit his girlfriend, and gave it to her.

Out in the driveway, he climbed back into the car he had arrived in, and sat in the back seat. There was a driver in the front seat, age seventeen. And the driver's girlfriend, who said she would drive home. And a friend of the driver in the other back seat.

"Dude!"

"Shhh! You'll wake everybody."

They backed out and they went to the beach.

This would be the last beach party of the season. When they got there, they ran out to the beach fire with the alcohol. Two bottles. The Cabernet Franc had gotten wedged under the back of the front seat, and in the excitement, nobody noticed.

Ten days later, the seventeen-year-old owner of this car, a bright yellow Nissan Xterra 4x4, had a heavy date with a beautiful young waitress he just met the week before. She was first class. But she and her family were going back to the city. In the afternoon before the date, he had taken the car down to the car wash on County Road 39 in Southampton and had it sent through. Then, when it came out, all sparkling bright, he drove it over to the vacuum and with the hose began to work on the seats and carpets. Then he found the Cabernet Franc.

"What's this?" he asked himself, sliding it out. But he didn't remember. Well, it was all wrapped up. He'd write a little note on it. It read HOPE THIS IS THE START OF SOMETHING GOOD. MEL.

But when he got to her house that night, she wasn't there. Her older sister was. And she said her sister had been called away suddenly to take care of her Aunt. She closed the door. Mel stood there and thought about it on the front steps for a while. And then he decided to leave it for her anyway. Nothing ventured, nothing gained.

In fact, she had stood him up. She'd had second thoughts about it after she agreed to go and decided she really didn't want to go. He wasn't her type. But from upstairs, looking out a bedroom window behind some curtains, she saw him leave the present. She felt terrible. Such a nice guy.

After he left, she went downstairs and brought it in. It sloshed around. Clearly it was a bottle of wine. But she didn't drink. She was, in fact, the captain of the high school tennis team at Dalton.

The next day, as chance would have it, was her mother's birthday. So she gave it to her.

"Thank you SO much," mother said. And she gave her a hug.

The next morning, they drove back to the apartment in New York.

One week later, the mother gave the bottle of wine to a girlfriend who was having a bridal shower.

And two weeks after that, the girlfriend, after receiving the bill from her party planner and discovering it was much less than she had thought it would be, had it delivered to the party planner's office with a thank you note.

Two months later, the party planner gave the bottle of Cabernet Franc to a lawyer friend of hers who had helped her resolve a rent dispute with her landlord.

And a month after that, the lawyer, invited out to the home of one of his wealthy clients in Sands Point for a dinner, brought the Cabernet Franc as a gift.

One evening, about a year later, this rich client draped a diamond necklace around the gold gift wrap of the Cabernet Franc, drove out to Westhampton Beach to visit his girlfriend, and gave it to her. She was overwhelmed with delight and put the necklace right on. Then she invited him to the dinner she had prepared for him aboard the yacht. She tore the gift wrap off the bottle now, and put the wine on the table. But they never drank it. It wound up in the wine cellar.

Ten years later, the rich man, having taken the wine out of his wine cellar, gave it to his cleaning lady. And that night, she gave it to her husband. He gave it to his cousin for her 26th birthday, and she gave it to her boyfriend, who was producing a major motion picture about Miami Boat Racing.

A week later, the boyfriend was killed in a boating accident while making this film. He had become very wealthy making films about racing — horse racing, auto racing, drag racing — all featuring a well known Kung Fu actor. The boyfriend had lived in a big house in Miami Beach in the wintertime and in a penthouse apartment in the Soho section of Manhattan in the summertime. Sotheby's bought the estate.

At the estate auction, three months later, the Chairman of a nationally known sporting goods company based in New York purchased this eleven-year-old bottle of Cabernet Franc without the gift wrap for $34,500. He had it put in the hermetically sealed, temperature controlled wine cellar in his oceanfront home in Sagaponack.

The following June, this man picked up a

The Available Choices in 1976, The Available Choices in 2006

By Dan Rattiner

In 1975, here is how I drove from my home on Three Mile Harbor in East Hampton to my office on Main Street, Bridgehampton.

Vehicle: 1955 Chrysler Imperial Convertible

I'd come out of my driveway and drive down Three Mile Harbor Road into downtown East Hampton. I'd go through the light, continue along Main Street to Town Pond and then off toward Sagaponack. Just past Ossorio's 60-acre compound, I'd either go straight on the highway all the way to Bridgehampton, or I'd turn left at Henri Sole's Villa D'Or Restaurant (Saracen today), and head down into Sagaponack for the longer, more leisurely way to Bridgehampton. The choice was not made depending upon traffic. It was made depending on how I felt. If I wanted wide open spaces with views off to the horizon, I would take the route through the Sagaponack potato farms, and enjoy the smell of the sea and the sound of the surf. I'd cut across Sagaponack at Hedges Lane and then, sometimes, stop at the Sagaponack General Store for some coffee and gossip. Then I'd drive up Sagg Main to Sagg Road, turn right at Ocean Road, left at the Monument on Main Street, and then make a left into my office driveway at the west end of town.

Time? 20 minutes on the Highway, 25 minutes going through Sagaponack.

In 2006, here is how I drive from my home on Three Mile Harbor to my office on Main Street in Bridgehampton.

Vehicle: 2005 Land Rover LE 4x4 SUV

I'd come out of my driveway and drive down Three Mile Harbor Road. When I'd get close enough to North Main Street and town to be traffic to be too thick through town and I'd take a "short cut" up Cedar Street to the right. I'd put on my blinker. Then I'd turn right, even right on red, go past Osborne Lane on the left, go past Sherrill and Palma and be looking out to make a left at Cooper to cross to Newtown Lane. If Cooper looked good, I'd turn there and make a second "Cooper" judgment halfway down toward Newtown. There is a light at Cooper and Newtown. If from afar I would see that there was a traffic tie up at the light, I'd take a right on McGuirk halfway down Cooper, swing around left to Newtown, then zigzag right at Newtown and left again at King and thus get myself to Gingerbread where I'd make a right.

If the second "Cooper" judgment was that it was all clear at the end, I'd drive down to Newtown, make the right on red at the light, left again at King, then right on Gingerbread, where I would have wound up if I had gone the other way.

Gingerbread curves left and becomes Toilsome, then crosses Route 114 at Highway Behind the Lots and then exits out onto the Montauk Highway at the Getty Station there at the end of Woods Lane. If traffic was tough as it got to Route 114, I'd hang a right there, go able to see what the traffic is and what the traffic light says just past Nick and Toni's, I'd move either into the left lane or the right. If traffic was thick, or if either of the two sets of traffic lights were just turning red, I'd move into the right lane.

I might note that in every case but one, you can look ahead and see if you ought to take the northern bypasses.

If traffic was thin and the lights were green, I'd move into the left lane. Mostly, I'd use the right lane.

The right lane meant that I was judging

under the railroad bridge, make an immediate left onto Cove Hollow Road and return to the Montauk Highway at the Red Horse Shopping Plaza. There I would make a right, merging into the Montauk Highway traffic and heading to Bridgehampton.

Down the Montauk Highway I'd go, past the 60-acre Perelman Compound (formerly the Ossorio Compound) and then arrive at the turn off at Saracen (formerly Henri Sole's Villa D'Or) to decide whether to make the left turn into Sagaponack or not.

You may have noticed that I have left out what happens if I do not turn at Osborne, but continue on down Cedar Street to where it ends at Stephen Hand's Path. To do this is a big, unknown commitment. But if everything else is tied up, it's a bail out decision. Go down to Stephen Hand's, make a left, cross Route 114, go under the railroad trestle, and you wind up where Stephen Hand's merges with the Montauk Highway just before you have to make the decision at Saracen (formerly Henri Sole's Villa D'Or).

To make the left at Saracen (formerly Henri Sole's Villa D'Or) is a big decision. If you look straight down the Montauk Highway and see that traffic has come to a halt from the light at the Wainscott Post Office a quarter of a mile ahead, then turning down at Saracen is a must. Get into the left turning lane, wait for an opening in the oncoming traffic, and when you see one, step on it.

By the way, this decision is also depending on whether you have to make a bunch of phone calls and you use a cell phone in the car and your service is from Verizon — on an earpiece, of course. If you do, then know that bailing out of the Montauk Highway at Saracen onto Wainscott Stone Road means you are about to lose your signal. And it will stay lost until halfway down Hedges two miles away. If you go straight, you keep it. You decide.

Anyway, if you make the left at Saracen, and then turn right onto Wainscott Main and eventually to Hedges, you will be driving through walls of hedgerows marking the property lines

Eothen, the estate of Andy Warhol

RE Stories

Selling the Homes of Warner LeRoy, Andy Warhol and the Morpurgos

By Dan Rattiner

A lot of people have been led to believe that the private estate of the late restaurateur Warner LeRoy was saved from development by East Hampton Town. Well, it wasn't. This 46-acre property is being carved up into eight different lots, each of which will have a sort of "starter" house on it, some little 6,000 square foot bauble that, I suppose, if you don't like, you can always tear down and build something else. Price is $5 million each and up.

The developer of the property didn't use the word starter in a recent interview with the media. But he did say that these lots were meant for people who couldn't afford Lily Pond Lane. On Lily Pond Lane, a parcel like this with a house on it would probably fetch $45 million. But these would only cost five.

"Our idea is that a number of young, affluent people want a substantial house out here before migrating to a MORE substantial house, like oceanfront or on a name street like Lily Pond Lane or Gin Lane. It's like a first run for them," is what he said.

The LeRoy property, in its heyday, which was only six years ago, took your breath away. You drove on a gravel driveway up a hill off Old Stone Highway in Amagansett to a modern, solid, stone, flat-roofed home with glass sliders all around perched in the center of the property on a rise. From this home, you could look out in all directions to see gardens and beautiful flowering trees and handsomely mown green lawns. At one end of the property, there was a babbling brook with an artificial waterfall made of boulders splashing water down into a pond filled with lily pads. It was one of the most peaceful places imaginable.

Warner himself was a flamboyant, dramatic landscaping and interior decoration. Tavern on the Green became the premiere restaurant in the city as far as numbers of dinners served every night. And it was a tourist destination right up there with the Empire State Building, the South Street Seaport and the Statue of Liberty.

Late in life, LeRoy tried to make the same transformation with his purchase of the Russian Tea Room. But he spent too much on his renovations there and for one reason or another, had to sell the place.

After his untimely death, his estate passed to his wife and children. His daughter, Jennifer, now runs Tavern on the Green. His wife, Kay, put the Amagansett house on the market. And now it's being divided up.

character. He was the son of a prominent Hollywood director and when he grew up he moved east and became the owner of the Tavern on the Green restaurant in New York City. It was a bit rundown when he bought it. But he saw it as a diamond in the rough, and brought in horse carriages and footmen, twinkly Christmas lights on all the trees — which he kept on year around — and lots of fascinating ble at your failure to achieve the ultimate success. Drive down to Lily Pond Lane. Some day, maybe. Some day.

Meanwhile, in Sag Harbor, another real estate saga continues. Two sisters, Helga and Anselm Morpugo, inherited a big clapboard boarding house behind the library on Union Street when their father died. They've lived in it off and on over the years. They've fought with one another off and on over the years. They've taken in boarders. They started an "Institute," which seems to exist largely on a piece of paper. And they've let the place run down, some might say, near to ruin.

Last year, in a moment of truce between the sisters, they held an auction on the steps of the house in the hopes of selling it for $5 million. By this time, they had gathered up a considerable history of the place. It was originally built by a Captain Vail, a famous whaling captain who came back to Sag Harbor to retire.

It was pretty dramatic stuff, having an auction on the front steps of the home. Lots of people came. The auctioneer, a Sag Harbor attorney named Steve Grossman, said he had a sealed bid, which would serve as an opening bid, of $1.5 million. So could he have $2 million? There was a long silence. And that was it.

Afterwards, for one reason or another, the sealed $1.5 million bid fell through.

This year, the Morpurgos went in another direction. It would be sold on eBay.

It went on eBay on August 27 as a "dilapidated post-and-beam militia commander's lodge." They would not take less than $19 million. And for that amount, you wouldn't get the land, although you'd get the ability to negotiate a long-term lease and maybe buy it later.

"Mint restoration of this magnificent Federalist-Italianate 2 1/2 story structure.....is estimated by local artisans as still very possible.....It is a priceless Revolutionary War trophy."

It also said that it had been built not by Captain Vail, but by a Captain John Hulbert, who was the "hero of Ticonderoga and crafter of the Hulbert flag eulogized by Francis Scott Keys (sic) in his 'the Star Spangled Banner'.....perhaps the house even contains the original Hulbert flag somewhere ensconced inside the walls....."

Never mind that the Hulbert Flag has been on display for sixty years every day in the Riverhead Museum. Never mind that carbon dating says it was sewn around 1840. Never mind that earlier it had been said that the house had been built by a Captain Vail. And never mind that John Hulbert was the Captain of the Bridgehampton militia, not the Sag Harbor militia, and that he got to Ticonderoga too late to fight in the battle, but in time to be asked to take some prisoners down to New York City.

Forget all that.

Well, the eBay listing ran until September 2. And the world took a pass. No bids. But it was, one supposes, worth a try.

Also in the news is the ongoing attempt, now in its second year, to sell Eothen, the oceanfront estate of the late Andy Warhol in Montauk for $50 million. The house does have its charms. It is on an eight-acre windswept parcel of oceanfront dunes just two miles from the Lighthouse. There is 600 feet of oceanfront. The neighbors include singer Paul Simon, TV personality Dick Cavett and until recently, the fashion photographer Halston, who has since passed away. Renting the house or visiting it during Warhol's time were Jackie Kennedy, Lee Radziwill and countless models and actresses. One year it was rented to the Rolling Stones, who rehearsed for a world tour on the property. More recently, Julian Schnabel, Jann Wenner, Ralph Lauren and Ian Schrager came to look at the property.

But the property also has its drawbacks. It was essentially used as a retreat for Warhol and his friends. It consists of six one-story buildings arranged around a central green that leads down to the rocky beach below. It is not a sand beach. The buildings are plain, though a living room has a beamed ceiling with the heads of fish and animals still mounted over the fireplaces. It was all built in 1930, by the wealthy founder of

Cheney's Secret

The True Story of How Dick Cheney Almost Ruined Halliburton

By Dan Rattiner

Most people know that Dick Cheney, before he became Vice President, was a successful, freewheeling businessman. When chosen by George W. Bush, he had been, for five years, the CEO of Halliburton, the big company that among other things provides non-military goods and services for our troops overseas. Bush admired Cheney and said so. Originally, he had asked Cheney to help him find a Vice President and, in the end, he just said, well, how about YOU? Cheney had, by that time, made some pretty daring decisions that were working out great. Halliburton's stock had risen from 35 to 50 during his tenure. Seemed like a good idea to bring Cheney on board.

What isn't widely known by the general public are the details of his reign at Halliburton.

At the suggestion of a friend, I have done an analysis of Cheney's time at Halliburton. Boy, is it a surprise.

The good stuff that Cheney did before he cashed out for $40 million to become Vice President of the United States consisted of a number of what appeared to be very good business deals. He negotiated to buy Dresser Industries, a company in the energy business. Dresser was very profitable and he bought it for a good price. Then he went after overseas business from foreign governments, aggressively bidding for contracts and getting them. The stock stayed around $50 for one year after Cheney left the company, and then the roof fell in.

It turned out that Dresser Industries had a reason it put itself up for sale — Cheney negotiated for it on a grouse hunting trip — and they left that part out when they talked to Cheney. They did tell him they had set aside some money to deal with an asbestos problem at their manufacturing facilities. It might cost as much as $50 million to fix. Three months after Cheney left, the real number was revealed. $4.4 billion. And now it was Halliburton's problem.

A few weeks later, it was learned there had been huge bribes given during the Cheney years to get the foreign business they got. This was against the law. One bribe was $130 million to officials in the Nigerian government. Predictably, Nigeria signed on the dotted line. Indictments were threatened.

And then a few weeks after that, an account-

SAG HARBOR'S CIGAR BAR WITHOUT CIGARS

By David Lion Rattiner

There is a wonderful little place in Sag Harbor that you can go to and enjoy a cigar, a beer, some sports and even a late night crowd. The Cigar Bar in Sag Harbor has developed a reputation over the years as being a place for intimate conversation, friendly bartenders, good music, a cigar purchased from their humidor, or a cigarette if you were so inclined. It's a wonderful place to go.

The Cigar Bar was around before the "Clean Air Act" was put into effect in New York State on July 24, 2003. The Clean Air Act, of course, was the controversial law that made it illegal to smoke cigars or cigarettes in virtually all workplaces. The law did not affect the Cigar Bar because they had a grandfather clause that made it legal for the bar to allow smoking, as stated in the Act. "Smoking is permitted in Cigar bars in existence prior to January 1, 2003 (where 10% or more of total annual gross income is from the sale of tobacco products.)"

You could still smoke at Cigar Bar. Yay for the rights of smokers.

Since the Monday after Labor Day, however, a local law has changed things. The local law supercedes the State Law. It is in Chapter 437 of Suffolk County Law and went into effect in January of this year and it does not have an exemption for existing cigar bars. The guys that go to smoke their cigars after a day out on their fishing boat, sailboat or yacht, to sip brandy and discuss the ways of the world are the ones that will feel the most frustration with the new law that is now being enforced at Cigar Bar. Who would have thought?

The regular patrons of Cigar Bar, who go to the bar because they can smoke there, are also angry about the whole thing, feeling that a freedom that they have come to enjoy has been sharply taken away. "It is almost surreal to go ing scandal rocked Halliburton. All the time that Cheney was touting the stock and pointing to the healthy and growing financials of the company, there was a little backstage chicanery with the numbers he was not telling anybody about. The stock reached a high of $53 at that time. There seemed no end to the good news. But it was all based on fraud.

Halliburton would bid a job for $70 million and win. Then they would do the job but, with supposed cost overruns, bill $105 million, and the customers would not pay more than $70 million because that is what they contracted the job for. These overblown bills had become something to expect from Halliburton. Nobody knew why.

Turns out that Halliburton accountants, in their monthly reports, carried the difference between the $70 and $105 million as "revenue." It should have been written off as bad debt. But as revenue it made the books look real good. And there were huge sums involved, which, supposedly, very soon, would be paid. So people bought the stock.

But now, as investors realized this was all crap, sold their positions and fled, the stock collapsed from its high of $53 to $8. For those not involved in financial matters, this means that if you had $1 million invested in Halliburton in 1999 and if you went to sell it in 2003, you'd get only $140,000. Cheney's five-year tenure at Halliburton, it was turning out, was a disaster, not a triumph. And the company was in deep, deep trouble. Cheney, when he finished being Vice President, wouldn't even be able to get a job as Janitor at Halliburton.

What could be done? Well, beginning in late 2002, as we all know, President Bush began to appear before Congress to ask for money to invade Iraq. He was talking about $50 billion at that time, and the Congress, believing Iraq would, at any moment, attack America with nuclear, chemical or biological weapons of mass destruction to clear the way for his buddies the terrorists, gave it to him.

The Iraqi attack would come on quickly, Bush assured Congress. So there really wasn't time to get into the bidding process for what the soldiers were going to need. Halliburton could do the job. Dick Cheney knew the place well. It was a natural fit. And whatever they charged, the country would pay it. Our national survival was at stake.

Today, after more than three years of war, Halliburton's stock has soared up to about $80. If you had that $1 million in stock, and stuck it out, your investment was now worth about $1.4 million.

If all of this is true, you might ask, how come Dick Cheney has not been indicted? And that is an interesting question. Early on in this debacle, after the truth was out, many stockholders at Halliburton joined together to file a lawsuit against the executives running this company. As legal papers flew back and forth, the attorney for the stockholders went to the judge and the lawyers for the company and negotiated a settlement to keep all this from becoming public. The amount in damages to be paid to those filing the lawsuit would be $6 million. The lawyer would get a third of that. The stockholders would divide up the rest and when you did the math it wasn't much but it was something. It was time to move on.

So it all seemed to get swept under the rug. Particularly since the war was now underway and the stock was rising again.

But, as it has turned out, it has not stayed under the rug.

Some stockholders rebelled at this ridiculous settlement, among them the Archdiocese of Milwaukee, and they re-filed. A judge looked at the case and brought in the stockholder's lawyer who had agreed to this low settlement amount and asked him why what seemed to be a case that could be settled in the hundreds of millions or even billions got settled for just $6 million? The lawyer could not successfully answer this question. So the judge threw the settlement out and they would start over. Now names would be named. And Dick Cheney might be among them.

But there is a catch. Dick Cheney as Vice President of the United States enjoys certain immunities against prosecution. To bring him in could delay it for years, as the lawyers determined if he was immune or not. And worse, it might even taint the prosecution. Throw patriotism into this mix and who knows how a judge would rule. In the end, it was decided to prosecute various Vice Presidents at Halliburton, but leave the man in charge, Cheney, alone. And so there you are.

Feel free to draw your own conclusions about all of this.

Stony Brook Southampton Makes Its Debut With a Wine Tasting

By Alan-Michael Braveman

The last time I saw John Halsey, the President of the Peconic Land Trust, he was on the patio behind Chancellors Hall at Southampton College, being honored for his efforts in saving thousands of acres of land from being turned into McMansions or Big Box Stores. That was two years ago. It was a sunny June day, overrun with nervous undercurrents and whispered murmurings passing between Dr. David Steinberg and his public relations minions and the omnipresent LIU security guards that trailed the President of Long Island University wherever he went. Dr. Steinberg had chosen that day to publicly explain to the assembled Southamptonites (who had come to the campus to honor John Halsey's wonderful work in land conservation) why LIU, in its infinite wisdom, had chosen to close the Southampton campus. The paradox of the events seemed to escape Dr. Steinberg. His explanations fell on stunned and disbelieving ears. When Dr. Steinberg finished his oration, Harry Marmion, a former President of the Southampton College, strode to the podium and smote Dr. Steinberg with the truth. "David (Dr. Steinberg), you're full of crap. It's a land grab, nothing more, nothing less and you know it."

The ensuing silence was deafening.

But now, John Halsey and I, along with more than two hundred other people, were back on the campus for a glorious celebration amidst the detritus of LIU's sale of the campus to Stony Brook University.

The change in the campus was palpable. The fresh mowed grass behind Chancellors Hall bespoke a caring environment. Gone were the stern-faced, anxious-looking LIU security rooms so the various individual symposiums that were on the program had to be held in the only room with seats, the Duke Lecture Hall. The lecture hall had also had seen some of its lighting boxes recently removed. All this is going on while LIU is also busy denuding the campus of artwork as well as removing all the books from the Library.

But the day turned out to be truly a wonderful celebration of renewed life under the friendly auspices of the Stony Brook Center for Wine, Food and Culture.

It was a day drenched in a warming sunshine that reflected genuinely positive emotions radiating from all those present who had spent the early part of the morning riding on Marine Research Vessels out to the Shinnecock Inlet. There they listened to discussions about the bay and the aquatic life that flourished as well as possible problems with estuaries and the wildlife that made the waterways their homes.

Dr. Shirley Strum Kenny's introductory address was filled with anticipation, and yet another new date for the closing on the protracted sale of the campus from LIU, which she announced as being now set for Oct. 4, 2006.

Dr. Kenny, who is president of Stony Brook, guards who seemed to be constantly surveying the crowds for potential enemies of the truth. No more car loads of self-important LIU center overseers, who peered into nooks and crannies as they whispered only to each other with grave and all-knowing nods of the head as they made notes in their little books. In point of fact, Long Island University has systematically removed all the furniture from all the class-announced that this was "the first conference of this kind here and will be followed by many other activities for the community...and on Oct 4 or 5th the name will officially change to Stony Brook Southampton.

"...Our Center for Wine, Food and Culture hosts this landmark event and Stony Brook is almost alone among universities in having such a center, and it is most appropriate that it should host this first major symposium on this campus. It's appropriate because like the Center, our work at Southampton will be innovative, visionary and a radical departure from the traditional undergraduate college. Here we will address issues vital to our times, how human beings relate to their environment, how to mitigate our impact on the natural world, and how our society may be educated for survival. We take Food and Wine seriously because how we eat, drink and celebrate raises fundamental questions about our civilization. The last century saw extraordinary scientific and social change but we have become increasingly aware that petrochemical technology is unsustainable, that our progress has carried destruction with it and that our way of life is killing our planet... Stony Brook University is eager to educate students to become champions of conservation and to promote the research by which we understand, conserve and live in harmony with the natural world. We have an exciting vision for Stony Brook Southampton. This community, its work and its aspirations are central to that vision."

It was a moving address and set the tone for the panel discussions that followed as well as the keynote address by noted author and environmentalist, Peter Matthiessen, who drew a rousing ovation from the more than two hundred people who had assembled in The Duke Lecture Hall this day. His grave warnings about the future of the planet and its varied species left some worrying. His dire prediction that in fifty years there would be no more polar bears was met with an audible gasp. His admonitions that "We can all do something. For example, write a letter to LIPA to end Greed, Waste and Stupidity and that those of us who can, should speak for those who cannot speak for themselves."

The various symposium panels that followed were peopled by serious and knowledgeable individuals who reflected the content and seriousness of Dr. Kenny's opening message. The reception afterward was a wonderful opportunity to taste some of the local vintages as well as great food offered by the assembled purveyors.

Dr. Kenny later related to me that the past few months had been a time of great concern and frustration for her. She said that she hoped that closure was finally in sight and that new temporary signs proclaiming the name Stony Brook Southampton were ready to be hung the moment the final papers were signed. Following that, the gates would be officially unlocked. She also was positively aglow about the new campus logo that was to be found on the posters for the day's events.

Among the assembled guests were alumni from Southampton College who were now upbeat about the future of their old campus. Dr. Martin Schoonen, the new interim Dean of the Stony Brook Southampton Campus, was there and talked about his and Dr. Kenny's plans for the future of the campus and the innovative concept for faculty to be truly interdisciplinary. He said his search was just beginning and he will be looking for about 25 new teachers over the next 18 months.

His youthful enthusiasm harkened back to the early hope-filled days of Southampton College when nothing seemed impossible.

Hope, enthusiasm and life abounded at the gathering. These were a group of people who truly wanted to make the world a better place.

A New Solution

Our Reporter Tries Tuesday Morning's Commute on Cty. Rd 39

By David Stoll

One of the best parts of writing for this paper is sitting at my desk, in my Aeron chair, writing criticisms of really bad ideas floated by politicians and bureaucrats. On the other hand, sometimes Dan makes me go out into the field to experience the implementation of those bad ideas. Today was such a day.

Readers who have been following the story of the cones know that for several weeks at the end of the summer season, Suffolk County Executive Steve Levy issued an administrative order to set up cones along that the portion of Route 27 owned by the County in order to create a second east-bound lane, by co-opting the median, left-turn lane. The road, known as CR 39, runs from the merge at the Lobster Inn to the intersection with the 7-Eleven at North Sea Road.

The experiment was a success. As both Dan and I reported, the biggest problem when driving during the morning rush hour "trade parade" was taking care not to speed. It is true that because left turns were prohibited along the stretch, businesses on the west-bound side catering to morning commuters suffered. This was a shame, indeed, but most east-bound travelers appreciated that traffic sped along.

Mr. Levy then proposed to permanently expand CR 39 to create two real east-bound lanes while maintaining the median, left-turn lane. As this project, in whatever form it ultimately may take, would take two full off-seasons to implement, it is hoped that the cones will make a comeback next summer.

All seemed well until Mr. Steve got too clever

FLYING ONE AMERICAN FLAG, OR A HUNDRED

By Renée Donlon

Patriotism as a pastime seems to be built into summers here on the East End. spectators drag coolers of beer and hotdogs down to the beach to watch the Fourth of July fireworks. On Main St., stores dress in red, white, and blue bunting to announce their summer sales, and, on the beach, mothers tell their kids to swim between the flags.

Now, with Labor Day a distant memory and the fifth anniversary of September 11th just recently celebrated, how did East Enders show their patriotism? The Unitarian Universalist Congregation of the South Fork and the East End Bill of Rights Defense Committee took the lead with their Constitution Day Celebration. The event was held on September 17th, the 219th birthday of the document, and there in the Unitarian Universalist Meeting House on the Bridgehampton-Sag Harbor Turnpike in Sag Harbor, attendees took turns reading it aloud in its entirety. The first Constitution Celebration was organized last year in response to the impending renewal of the Patriot Act. "Unitarians are very involved with civil liberties," explained Michael O'Neill, one of the planners of this event. "[We therefore] did not agree with parts of the Patriot Act that were unconstitutional, especially those that targeted foreigners." In response, the reading was meant to reaffirm and remind us of the right that the constitution affords all citizens.

Before the reading, the congregation's minister, the Rev. Alison Cornish, explained how America started with meeting houses as the centers of both social and civic life. "We named this [building] a meeting house in order to carry on that tradition. All are welcome to gather here to do important things, and reading the Constitution is a very important thing," said Cornish.

by half and came up with an idea that entitles him to the Moron of the Week award. (He may deny personal responsibility for the idea, but since he insisted on taking personal responsibility for the cone program, even though Jay Schneiderman forced Mr. Levy's hand, it seems fair enough to mock Mr. Levy for the current blunder.)

The idea is this. Eliminate all cones, restoring CR 39 to its one-lane procession, BUT, ostensibly to make traffic move more quickly, prevent people from turning on to CR 39 from back roads. In other words, if you were to exit the Sunrise Highway at the Shinnecock Exit just after the Canal and take the Old Montauk Highway east, you may not return to CR 39 during the trade parade. If you use the Old

Montauk Highway to get all the way to Southampton Village and beyond, the new restrictions make no difference to you. But if you use the Old Montauk Highway to bypass the merge and then return to CR 39 in order to get to your place of business, your only choice is to add to the merge traffic.

Dan asked me to investigate. Is this idea really as bad as it sounds? So, I awoke early, scalded my throat with two cups of quickly-consumed coffee, and got into my car with my dog, Pete. I had been through this routine once before, at that time marveling at the cones and fast-moving east-bound traffic as I headed west on CR-39. This time, I would marvel at the ridiculous and unnecessarily slow-moving traffic.

I drove all the way to the Hamptons Bays exit, looped back on to the Sunrise Highway now heading east, and proceeded along, knowing full well what sort of traffic I would encounter and wondering why Dan enjoys playing with my peace of mind. As is always the case, traffic moved well even beyond the Shinnecock Exit. This is the fates' way of tricking people into staying on Route 27 rather than taking back roads.

Just before the merge, traffic stalled, so I had plenty of time to read the new signs. No longer was I ominously warned that there would be no left turns for five miles; those signs had been whited out. Now I was told that there would be no access to CR 39 from the Old Montauk Highway. The "Reduce Speed Ahead" signs remain, their former irony having been gloriously restored. After some time, I made it through the merge and crawled towards North Sea Road.

Although I had taken the rush-hour trade parade route only once before — for my report on the cones — I certainly have been stuck in weekend CR 39 traffic many times, so I know a little something about the traffic patterns. Traffic seemed to lurch and slow along the CR 39 stretch as it used to. We drove just a bit faster immediately after the merge, slowed to a near-halt at the Tuckahoe Road and McGee Street traffic lights, and then sped up after the traffic light near P. C. Richard's. While stuck near the McGee Street light, Pete and I were sprayed by someone's irrigation system.

The trip from the merge to North Sea Road took more than double the time it had taken when the cones were out, even though that was during the high season. It was certainly the case that the restricted access to CR 39 from back roads did not improve traffic. Whether the restrictions made things worse after merge is hard to say. One reason that the restrictions may be utterly irrelevant beyond the merge is that every single south-side gas station and business and south-bound road is accessible from CR-39. People slow down to turn off, and others merge back on. Closing down a measly few access points cannot possibly make a difference.

So, with the adventure completed, I am back in my Aeron chair, criticizing Mr. Levy. Hopefully he will decide in short order that, if we cannot have our cones anymore, at the very least our traffic should be permitted to revert to "traffic jam as usual," without silly gimmicks.

* * *

Perhaps by some miracle, traffic conditions will improve. Time will tell. Watch for the next installment in the next issue. —DR

Boating Accident

Ships Collide in Sag Harbor During the Final of the Whaleboat Race

By Renée Donlon

Maritime camaraderie and fun ultimately diffused controversy at the 114th annual Sag HarborFest, but not before a collision and an argument with the whaleboat races, a main attraction of the weekend-long festival that celebrates the town's nautical history. The controversy crept in at the Men's Championship races when two of the three boats collided. Team Whalers and the John K. Ott Cesspool Service Team (playfully dubbed "Team Poop-Pee") started strong, but soon tangled oars and tempers. An oar went overboard. A member from Team Ott jumped in after it. While the overboard rower swam after his boat, paddle in tow, the two boats collided again while rounding the giant floating whale that marked the halfway point.

Meanwhile, Team What Color Painting (WCP), whose boat had lagged in the beginning, took the opportunity to row smoothly and unexpectedly into first place. While team WCP collapsed onto shore to enjoy their surprise victory, Team Whalers and Team Ott paddled up to controversy on the sand. Members of the Ott Team accused Team Whalers of throwing their oar in the water. Ray Pettigrew of Team Whaler said while it is common for oars to get tangled in other boats, protocol is to stop using that oar

(so that no one is hit with it) and to just row with the other in order to get free. "They didn't do that," claims Pettigrew. "[The oar] hit me in the ribs. It almost hit another rower in the neck. So, we threw it out of the boat." Though Team Ott accused the Whalers of cheating, and, at one point, called for a rematch, Pettigrew still called the race "the most exciting one in eight years."

The Women's Championship (in what was

Competition. A debate over first place was swiftly settled by a one-on-one tiebreaker round of clams. Eighteen dozen clams and two cut hands later, the contest had a winner; Justin Levine took first place, leaving Scott Aldrich with second. "He wanted to be a chef since he was four-years-old," said proud mother Judy Simonson of her champion son. "He'd be in the backyard making soups out of grass and rocks. He wrote menus as soon as he knew how." Simonson seemed to be right about her son's culinary passion; though the competition had ended, Levine continued to engage in friendly battle with other contestants for the pure joy of shucking.

Competing was not the only way to have fun this HarborFest. The warm and sunny weather made strolling through the stalls and tents delightful. Many of these tents were devoted to a farmers' market. Streams of people walked back to their cars carrying loaves of bread and bundles of celery on their hips like toddlers. People and bees alike particularly hovered around the jars at the Paumanok Preserves table. Offering samples of the jams (of which the Peach-Chardonnay was my favorite), Judy Tomas said that as "seventh-generation Sag Harbor," perhaps telltale female behavior) was just as exciting with none of the fighting. Indian Wells Wenches took the lead and kept it, gaining support from fans on the beach shouting "Go Wenches!" The Wenches beat the Sag Harbor Liquor Store team and the ladies' version of Team Ott.

After the whaleboat races, controversy sparked again at the Clam Shucking HarborFest is "a part of life for [her]." "It's when the town puts on its best," she added shooing away a bee.

Bees and people once again agreed on the lovely flowers that the LVIS had provided. The ladies also sponsored the Children's Fair at the Custom House. Judging by the number of face-painted children running around the wharf, the fair was a success.

Norman Bloom of the US Coast Guard Auxiliary taught several of these painted children, and me, how to tie nautical knots. After many rabbits going around many rope trees, I went for a snack at the Chowder Contest. A $5 mug let me sample as much of the competing chowders as I liked. hungry," sang out volunteer Sandy Wolge. Lillianna Woudsma, organizer of this new addition to HarborFest, said "We went through 288 mugs before we had to borrow cups from the bar." The Ross School won for best white chowder in this new hit event.

The perfect atmosphere for all this eating, shopping, and strolling was provided by the festival's musicians. Sunnyland Jazz Band played on the wharf while Sampawams Creek performed their maritime music (including the "Gilligan's Island" theme) on the beach. John Corr's mix of tin whistle, spoons, guitar, and banjo gave his nautical songs a lovely, nostalgic air. Corr, a HarborFest veteran, said he takes "any excuse to come out here. It's so beautiful." Sag Harbor would agree.

copy of Dan's Papers and was suddenly struck by the beauty of the landscape painting that adorned the cover. There was the artist's name. He looked him up in the phone book. He lived in Springs. But before he called him, he called his wife, who was vacationing with her sister in Cannes for a week.

"I think I have found the perfect painting for over the mantelpiece in the library," he said.

"Whatever you think best," she said. She was sitting alongside the hotel pool in a bikini, drinking a Cosmopolitan, a male masseur massaging her shoulders.

"It will be a surprise," the man said. "For when you get home."

The next morning, the man was up in the artist's studio. The two of them were looking at the painting.

"It's wonderful," the man said. "I'll give you $50,000 for it."

The artist, who would have parted with it for $5,000, kept a poker face. "I wouldn't sell it for less than a hundred."

"Tell you what," the man said. "I have a twelve-year-old bottle of Cabernet Franc that recently was rated at 98 by the Wine Journal. It's worth $50,000 and I have it in my wine cellar. I'll give you $50,000 and the bottle of wine."

"Deal," the artist said.

Later that day, the painter and his wife trucked the painting in an old station wagon over to the man's house in Sagaponack and got both the money and the wine. There was no more gift wrap now. There was, instead, a seal of authenticity around the neck of the wine bottle, put there by Sotheby's before the auction. The artist had no idea the wine had once been his.

"I think we ought to drink this wine," the artist's wife said. "Let's party."

And so they did.

Neighbor:

By Kirk Cassels

His face is famous to so many television viewers by now. But for how long, exactly, has this face been a familiar one to the rest of the world? When he squints his eyes, there is something in Anderson Cooper's sleek and distinguished face that makes you trust his experience in reporting the story. Maybe it is that full head of gray hair or perhaps it is something similar to what you once felt or thought while watching Peter Jennings or Walter Cronkite? Agree or not, when you do watch Anderson Cooper you do know what's on his mind because it shows in his face. While he dispatches from the frontlines of any location, the gravity of the story always manages to emerge somewhere in his grimace.

Cooper never wastes time with a story nor does he shy away from a challenge, but you would think he takes time to escape from his work at some point or another. At least, that may be a reason he has a pleasantly private spot to call his own in Quogue. While away from the monitors, the mikes and the mayhem, and among sand and seas, who knows what story shows on in his face?

When you consider the number of towns, states, countries and islands Cooper has visited in his career and private life, it is quite flattering that he chooses the East End as his solace spot. Working and living out of New York City may have something to do with it as well. Of course, when you are a descendant of the Vanderbilts, this neck of the woods must be inherently attractive.

For those of you that are actually not familiar with the man, Anderson — or "Andy" as his friends know him — has his own show titled "Anderson Cooper 360," which airs weeknights on CNN. His first prime-time gig with CNN began during the early stages of the conflict in Iraq in March 2003. However, the story that he reported which made him most recognized remains his unforgettable coverage of Hurricane Katrina. Cooper's immediate presence during and after the storm moved some viewers and colleagues to refer to him as a "first responder." His poise earned him his two-hour primetime slot shortly thereafter.

Cooper looks comfortable behind his desk in

New York City, and he should. He was born in the city almost 40 years ago, and graduated from high school at the Dalton School, eighteen years later. He continued his education at Yale University until he graduated in 1989 with a Bachelor's Degree in political science. For two summers, he interned for the Central Intelligence Agency at its home base in Langley, VA. A brief academic extension took place when, a few years later, he took a class in Vietnamese at the University of Hanoi.

As fascinated as Cooper may have been by classified intelligence or an exotic language, apparently neither could lure him like the bait of a good story—although travel may have had something to do with it. Cooper's first stint in journalism began with a small network called Channel One News that broadcast stories to high schools and junior high schools across the country. The market for such news may have been neither saturated nor well-paying, yet the man managed to report, produce and package stories from Russia, Israel, Iran, Rwanda, Bosnia, Somalia, and South Africa as the chief international correspondent.

His credentials landed him a job at ABC News where he provided stories for World News Tonight with Peter Jennings, 20/20 and several interactive World News Now programs. Rumor has it Cooper first sought a receptionist job with ABC during the time between his graduation from Yale and teaming up with Channel One News. Apparently, the company wanted him to get some more experience first. In 2000, Cooper toyed with semi-stardom away from the news desk as a one-time host of the now defunct reality show "The Mole." Luckily, he followed the advice of close friends to avoid the entertainment branch of the general media.

Cooper arrived at CNN in late 2001 and served as the weekend anchor until the conflict in Iraq began. Ever since, he has shown up with increasing frequency in the average American home and has become synonymous with names like Larry King, Bill O'Reilly and Chris Matthews. Just like them, he will bring you his take on the news whether you like it his way or not. So far, it has done him well and cleared space for a National Headliners Award he won for covering the 2004 tsunami as well as an Emmy for his part in covering Princess Diana's funeral.

You probably will not see much of Andy while he is out on the East End. He does not headline the latest benefit gala nor does he go on party rampages in public. But he is out here, and some rumors whisper he's thinking of moving... just down the shore to East Hampton. Whichever corner of the Hamptons he chooses, however, he'll likely be reporting his own story for quite the smaller audience, but perhaps for quite some time.

Who DID know about the party were some marketing types employed by a real estate firm who also had access to the property. They used the shoot as a hook to have an Open House, which they promoted as an "event." Why involve Victoria's Secret, anyway? They don't need to know. For those who came, these marketing people were very gracious, served drinks and nibbles and gave tours of the property, except for the property. Drinks and hors d'oeuvres would be served. We sent some reporters down there, and they came back to say that there was a Victoria's Secret shoot, but Victoria's Secret had never been informed about any party. And they were pissed.

of the big McMansions that have now been built where the potato fields used to be. No views. You can stop for coffee at Sagg Main, if you can find a space to park, and you can then drive up Sagg Main to Sagg Road and turn left (past the Verizon Wireless-Kennedy Compound signal blackout block) toward Ocean Road in Bridgehampton.

As for going straight on the Montauk Highway at Saracen, you will have ample additional opportunities as you go toward Bridgehampton to bail out onto back roads if the traffic gets impossible. To the north, there is the bailout at Wainscott Harbor Road at Wainscott Antiques, followed by a left at Narrow Lane, a right on Sagg and a left on Narrow. Next is the Sagg Road bailout up past the Wolffer winery and across the railroad bridge, to a left on Narrow, and there is a further bailout at Norris also to a left on Narrow.

Main Street and then less than fifty yards on, the left turn into the Dan's Papers driveway, which by the way, often gets you papal dispensation from oncoming traffic because at Butter and Montauk there is a traffic light and motorists may have to stop anyway.

I might note that in every case but one, you can look ahead and see if you ought to take the northern bypasses. The exception to this is none of the three above, but a fourth, a little known bailout on the right just past the Sagg Road bailout. Sagg Road, you will recall, is the second of the three bailouts, the third being Norris. But if you get past Sagg and all looks clear, there is a narrow little two lane road called Poxabogue just a quarter mile further along on the right, which takes you to Old Farm and thence to Narrow. But it is impossible to make a decision about whether you should use it because the Highway turns here and the view ahead is blocked by some trees. You can pass the Poxabogue turnoff (at the old antique shop), and suddenly 100 feet on, you are in a huge traffic jam heading up toward the Bridgehampton School. You are in it before you can see it. And if you take a chance and don't take Poxabogue, you are faced with the very real possibility of taking a complete U turn on the Montauk Highway to get back to it, that's how bad it can get going into town on the Montauk Highway from the east before you get to the Norris bailout.

There are really only two bailout points to the south if you stay on the Montauk Highway

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

Steve Irwin

I try to be funny when I write this column because I get a kick out of some of the ridiculous things that I notice in my life on a weekly basis. However, this week, I have to get off my chest my feelings about The Crocodile Hunter's death and how the news has shaken me. I'm still not over Steve Irwin's passing. The crocodile trapping and wrestling Aussie, who had a show on Animal Planet called the "The Crocodile Hunter," has somehow really touched my soul. It is just so sad that he died.

I was never really much of a fan of the show, but when I did see that it was on, I would watch it and just marvel at Irwin's enthusiasm about animals, conservation and nature. It's weird how quickly you respect somebody when they are completely themselves on camera. Steve Irwin was nobody else except himself and in today's world, that is rare. If this guy ran for president, I would have voted for him.

Last week I was watching the tribute that the Animal Planet did for Steve Irwin in between innings of the Red Sox -Yankees games and I was almost brought to tears by what people were saying about him. I saw tapes of him talking with great interest about his love for his father, his daughter, his wife and the tragic loss of his mother. I couldn't stop thinking about how good of a person this guy was and how perplexed I was that he had been killed while filming a documentary about underwater animals.

What really has amazed me is how emotional I and many other people I know have been feeling about losing Steve Irwin. It's almost as if an innocence to our personalities has been lost. It also makes us feel more vulnerable in a way. Even though just the title "crocodile hunter" immediately sends danger signals off in our heads and even though when we watched Steve on television we would say to ourselves, "This guy is out of his mind," we never for one second believed that it was possible for somebody like him to be killed in such a way. It was like he was invincible to these kinds of things in some way. You could see in his eyes that he was aware of what he was doing and that he was confident that he could handle it.

I really feel that a lot can be learned from Steve Irwin and I'm not talking about animal conservation or statistics about crocodiles. I'm talking about the way he lived and how he treated people. I think that if Steve never landed a hit television show that he would have been the exact same person that he was and still would have brought happiness to people all around him. I think that if more of us acted on our passions and not our ambitions, the world would be a much better place. I think that Steve Irwin had the secret to happiness in life and I have never seen it more clearly in a person than him.

So what do we have to say about a guy like Steve Irwin? Well, for one, you are doing yourself and the people around you a favor when you approach life in the way that he approached life. All you have to do is watch thirty seconds of him on television and you will see what I am talking about.

You can also learn from Steve the importance of living life to the fullest and to really experience it, not just mope along through it. And of course, you can learn from him the importance of conservation and the natural beauty of the earth. All of this can be learned from a guy that made a living jumping on fifteen-foot long crocodiles.

As strange as it sounds, I can tell you that the memory of Steve Irwin will forever be in the back of my mind as somebody that I will strive to be like and that I will always admire. I think that his passing is tragic, but it is also a strong reminder of how important it is to pay attention to how you live your own life.

With Sophisticated Jumbo Loan Program

NY - Mortgages for multi million dollar homes is typically limited to 50% financing, carries a higher rate and requires full income verification.

A scarcely known loan is available for home purchases and refinances that offers up to 90% financing, cuts monthly payments by as much as 45% and requires no income verification. Additionally there are enhanced tax and pre-payment advantages with increased cash flow not available with other mortgages. Many wonder why they haven't been informed about this unique loan. One reason is this loan does not profit lenders in the same way other loans do so they're not easy to find.

The company sponsoring these programs, North Atlantic Mortgage Corp., has made a Free report "Sophisticated Jumbo Financing" available. This report also addresses many other unique types of mortgages, credit issues, and most importantly how to get a great Jumbo loan with no income or asset verification.

If you are self-employed, professional or high-income individual, there are many other savvy "secrets" and various loan options that you probably aren't aware that exist.

going past Saracen. I say two because although there are several more, they can be difficult just to make a left turn from the Montauk Highway to get to, and we're talking only a four mile stretch here, so you might as well take one of the other two.

The first bailout point is at the light at Sagg Main. You can make your left, go past Loaves and Fishes, then down into Sagaponack to make a right onto Sagg Road at the Sagg School. From here you go up toward Ocean Road the same way as if you had taken the bailout at Saracen.

The second (and last) southern bailout happens if you blew the northern bailout at Sagg Main, decided to take a pass at Poxabogue Road and find yourself in this long line of cars just past it.

If you opt NOT to do the U Turn, which really is just so embarrassing, you can go a little further on, maybe a 1/4 mile, at a crawl, until on the left, you get to Lockwood just alongside the Bridgehampton School. Lockwood goes south then curves to the west and turns into Hildreth before coming out at Ocean Road.

At Ocean Road, by the way, you do NOT turn north and head up to the light as you might have done in 1975. No, no, no, no, no. You'll have driven into the mess. Instead, turn SOUTH on Ocean, turn right on Hildreth Lane, then pass School and Church on your right, then make the right turn onto Halsey Lane and sneak into the Dan's Papers parking lot from the entrance on Halsey on the side. Voila.

Time? 25 minutes to 50 minutes depending.

* * *

I shall end this account with a story. Only if you are familiar with what goes on at downtown Bridgehampton by the light and the monument, will this make any sense to you.

Enjoy.

In that year of 1975, I bought a 1955 Chrysler Imperial Convertible. This was an enormous, 6,000 pound pig of a car which is worth a fortune today if you can find one. The one I got, for $900 (it was twenty years old) was a deep maroon color, had the coveted bull's-eye taillights on the top of the rear fenders, had red leather bucket seats with white piping, and chrome everywhere. It had been kept in immaculate condition by its prior owner, Paul, at Southampton Aircraft and Auto Upholstery (still today exactly where it was then on County Road 39).

At that time, this being the very first day I owned it, I was very happy and proud. But I was also low on gas.

Anyway, I was rumbling eastbound down Main Street in Bridgehampton heading for the monument, and at that time, where there is today this wholesale beverage barn across from the Monument, there was a gas station run by the Damiecki Brothers. I was, of course, now out of gas. (This car got 6 miles a gallon.) I signaled left, crossed the white line and turned into this gas station, pulled up to the pump and then began talking to both of the brothers as they filled it up. And up. And up. It had a 30-gallon gas tank. I was enthusiastic. I was witty. I was enjoying a glorious sunny day with the top down.

After they finished with the gas, I inched up to the curbing on the Lumber Lane side of this property and came to a halt. I still wanted to go east, toward East Hampton, but it would be tricky. So I looked carefully left down Lumber Lane and there were no cars. I looked left down the Sag Harbor Turnpike and there were no cars. I looked right down Ocean Road and there were no cars. I looked down the Montauk Highway to the east and nothing was coming. And then I looked back to the right to see if anybody was coming down Main Street from the west. And there wasn't anybody coming from there, either.

And so, I revved the engine, pushed it into gear and moved slowly forward, straight out into the intersection with a mind to re-cross the white line to continue toward East Hampton. This was perfectly legal to do this at that time.

I had accelerated to about five miles an hour and had gone about thirty feet when I smashed into the passenger side front door of a little Plymouth sedan directly in front of me, the only place I didn't look. The Plymouth was at the light, facing south, its driver politely waiting for the light to change to green so it could continue across the highway and down Ocean Road.

Nobody was hurt, but the Chrysler (bent grill) essentially ate the Plymouth (totaled). The Damiecki Brothers were doubled over with laughter. And then the cops showed up. •

HAVE YOU LOST OR ARE YOU LOSING YOUR TEETH?

If so, you may be a candidate for Dental Implants. At the offices of Dr. Howard A. Popper we have placed thousands of implants since 1985, including Long Island's FIRST "Teeth in an Hour" THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR EXPERIENCE.

Reading the document proved to be not only an important, but also a long thing. It took just over two hours to get from "We the People....." to the 27th amendment. Yet songs, such as "American the Beautiful" and early American hymns, sung by all the attendees after every twenty-five articles kept things lively. Also welcome were the occasional comments by Martha Potter, a retired US History teacher who gave concise background notes that helped put the Constitution into a historical context, giving the articles more meaning.

Jim Henry, who recently filed suit against the Town of Southampton on behalf of the congregation for infringement of their civil rights, added more serious comments. He referred briefly to the July 4th incident in which the Town, taking issue with the congregation's anti-war posters, tried to keep the group from marching. It seems the Town felt peaceful protest had no place in the celebration of our nation's freedom from oppression.

The Town of Southampton is currently wrestling with another question of patriotism. At a September 8th work session, the Town Board discussed a proposal to exempt the American flag from a town sign code that limits the number of flags that can be displayed to two. Under the sign code, flags also must measure sixty square feet or less.

While all Town Board members now sponsor the proposed legislation, Councilwoman Nancy Graboski and Councilman Steve Kenny originally had concerns about the possible implications of such a law. "Take a look at car dealerships," Graboski said. "[They could have] forty, fifty, sixty American flags [on their properties], and not so much for making the statement of 'I'm more patriotic than you,' but more for that of 'Can you see me?'"

Town Supervisor Patrick Heaney understands that the law could allow businesses to abuse the flag for advertising means, but ultimately he states that there has been "too much sacrifice associated with what the flag represents to allow the cheapening of its value by regulating it as if it were just another sign." Conscious of that sacrifice, Heaney discussed his ideas with "a number of veterans" before he presented the proposed law to the Board. "I asked one veteran what he felt about [someone displaying] a hundred flags, and he said, 'Let it be a hundred and one.'"

Assuming that an unlimited number of flags can denote patriotism, how do other East End towns match up? If one measures in terms of ordinances restricting the flag, East Hampton and Southold come out ahead as they have none that limit the number of flags one can display. If one measures by the Town Supervisor's personal flying of the flag, Southampton and East Hampton tie. Southampton Supervisor Heaney displays one on his house, and, when asked why only one, he laughed and replied, "Well, it's a little house." East Hampton Supervisor McGintee also displays one "off his front porch, in proper form." Southold Supervisor Scott A. Russell is a close second to their tie. He flies the flag at his home, but "not as often as [he would] like."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #417

Football Season and the Art of Home Management

Football season has officially begun. Thousands of men across the country have stood in front of their significant others and said, "Football season has begun. Before we get near the Playoffs, is there anything you want moved, discussed or painted? Speak now, or shut up till after the Super Bowl."

Women lament being football widows, yet it can work to our great advantage if we simply abandon being sensitive and caring. Those emotions just hold us back anyway.

Things to do while he watches the game.

1. Get a new hairdo. Anything you want. He's not going to notice till mid January 07.

2. Redo the bedroom. New carpet, new bedroom set. He's sleeping in his La-Z-Boy on the weekends and too tired to notice anything new during the week. By the time he notices the new furniture, it will have some wear on it and you can fall back on our old reliable line, "That's not new. We've always had this. I just moved it / cleaned it/painted it/rearranged it."

3. I don't endorse having extramarital affairs, but if you must, do it during football season and end it during the playoffs. It will give him a feeling of relief to hear you say, "Okay, if you're going to watch the game, I'm going to blah, blah, and blah." And you can actually say "blah, blah and blah" because after they hear "Okay, if you're going to watch the game.." the rest is a blur to them. They're just relieved that you won't be in the house prattling in the background while the game is on.

4. Experiment with new recipes that YOU like! He's fine living on nachos and beer for the next four months. Buy that bright red Kitchen Aid Stand Mixer! He won't see it. He's just going to and from the fridge.

5. You can redecorate any room and in Spring, when he notices the changes, he won't say anything because he's not sure exactly what has changed and if he asks you, "What's different?" he knows he'll hear, "I put those curtains up six months ago, and you're just seeing them now? You never notice anything I do to make this house look nice! I don't know why I even try, blah, blah, blah..." . Then he feels like a fool. Not because he didn't notice your improvements, but because he knows better than to open his mouth and admit it.

6. Try to plan your pregnancies so that you're not due during football season. It's so hard to drive yourself to the hospital while you're in labor. It's so embarrassing when no one visits but your Mom and girlfriends. And then, after the Super Bowl, you always have to explain to him where this new baby came from. I have a friend whose was in labor/giving birth DURING the Super Bowl. Her husband and father rotated between the delivery room and the visitor's lounge, updating each other constantly on the respective events that they regarded as equally important.

7. Women who aren't used to being football widows consistently made a critical mistake that jeopardizes their lives. Never, under any circumstances, ever, not even to announce a tornado about to hit the house, stand in front of the TV during a game and say, "We need to talk...". He'll be instantly enraged and not hear anything you say. He'll agree to anything to get you to move. However, the agreement won't stick because it was made under duress. Standing in front of the TV during a game is the worst thing you can do in a relationship. The female equivalent would be your husband getting drunk in front of your family at Thanksgiving Dinner and exposing himself to your mother, it's that bad...

9. I always used football season to covertly change his wardrobe. New socks would creep in and old favorites would disappear. I'd buy my hubby underwear in the correct size. Men think they can wear size 36 for as long as they can stretch the waistband to fit them. Their theory is that they aren't overweight if they can wear size 36 underwear. One season, my hubby went from size 36 to size 40 underwear... Threadbare flannel shirts evaporated and his flower power jeans from 1968 too. The trick is, not to clean the closet. Just pull out the old stuff and jam in the new things. That way, the new stuff absorbs the old smells and makes the transition easier.

So just remember, football season equals abandonment to a woman in love and control to woman in her right mind.

North Fork Crew Guys Take First

North Fork Rowers Win First At the FISA World Masters Rowing Regatta

By T.J. Clemente

There is a magic to a crew regatta. Racing shells are being unloaded off special trailers. Singles are often loaded off cars. Everyone is helping put the racing crafts on saw horses to get them ready to be put in the water. The colors of prestigious clubs and schools fly in the air and quite frankly every rower is in the best of condition because the sport demands so much both physically and mentally.

Two men of Greenport recently experienced the exhilaration of all their hard work and toils. They were part of a crew of four that came in first in a seven-boat field at the 33rd Annual FISA World Masters Rowing Regatta held on Mercer Lake in West Windsor, New Jersey two weekends ago. Roy Buchanon, age 48, and Joe Townsend, age 61, along with two other crew members, Casey Baker and Dick Curtis, finished first in the 50-55 age group of a race that covered 1000 meters (more than 10 football fields long). They covered this course in 3 minutes and 15 seconds. This year's event had more than 7,000 rowers representing 45 countries so of course winning was indeed a big deal for both Greenport and the two men. With rowers from all over the world, as far away as Japan and Australia, this is the premiere Masters event in the world. In an almost flawless race, the men took the lead and never had to worry about their competitors.

Joe Townsend, the senior rower, has seen it all. He has been on world championship and Pan American games teams. He reportedly said winning this race and getting a gold medal was like "a congratulations for surviving." In other words, rowing 1000 meters is not for the weak.

Roy Buchanon on the other hand was more impressed with the competition. He reportedly said, "Its like a who's who of the rowing world....These guys are big rowers.... It's a weird combination between a sprint and a long race.... It's like running a mile flat out. It is as hard as I have worked all year."

Joe Townsend also had second place finishes in three other races at the regatta. Roy also brought home a second and third place finish. Coming up next for Roy Buchanon is the chore of organizing the Dory races for the Greenport Maritime Festival this upcoming weekend September 22-24. It will be a lot more fun this year for Roy with that wonderful hard earned gold medal hanging around his neck. As he reportedly said, "That is where you want to be."

Palmer Vineyards Gets A New Winemaker With Two Decades Of Experience

By Lenn Thompson

On September 1, Aquebogue's Palmer Vineyards has announced the appointment of industry veteran Miguel Martin as winemaker. A native of Madrid, Spain, Martin has nearly two decades of winemaking experience at some of the world's best-known wineries — including Yalumba in Australia's Barossa Valley, and both Gloria Ferrer Winery and Robert Mondavi in California. He also holds an undergraduate degree in agricultural engineering with a specialization in fermentation sciences from Universidad Politecnica de Madrid and a master's degree in enology and viticulture from the Center for Agrarian Investigation, Finca El Encn in Madrid. Martin also studied advanced winemaking at the University of California-Davis — America's most prestigious enology program. Robert J. Palmer, owner of Palmer Vineyards, said of Martin "Miguel Martin is an important addition to the Long Island winemaking scene. He brings not only 10 years of experience working with the highly regarded Robert

Peconic Bay Medical Center Gets A Boost

Large Gala Attended By Over 500 People Raised Money For The Center

By Debbie Tuma

In the off-season, who would imagine that one of the best events of the year was yet to take place? Who would also imagine that, after last Friday's torrential rainstorm, an elegant party for 500 people could be held outside, under a tent on Saturday night?

But the first gala "Black and White" benefit was held at the Westhampton Beach estate of Neal and Cynthia Hochman, to raise funds for the Peconic Bay Medical Center's continuing services at their emergency department out on the North Fork. And despite the rainstorm, it went off without a hitch, and was a huge success.

Andrew Mitchell, President and CEO of the Peconic Bay Medical Center, welcomed everyone, including NYS Senator Ken LaValle, for his continued help with the Riverhead-based hospital. "This is a night of firsts—it's the first time we've held a benefit on the South Fork, and we are very grateful to the Hochmans for their donation of this wonderful property," he said.

"Tonight is also the first event being held under our new name of Peconic Bay Medical Center (which was formerly called Central Suffolk Hospital)." This hospital is affiliated with Stony Brook University Hospital and Stony Brook University School of Medicine. It is also part of a hospital consortium including Southampton Hospital, Eastern Long Island Hospital, and Brookhaven Hospital.

Mitchell explained that Peconic is also working on a separate capital program to raise $50 million to build a new emergency room facility. Mitchell said this is all part of the hospital's vision to provide quality, comprehensive and compassionate care, and to be the healthcare provider of choice for "our communities."

This magnificent party started with a long cocktail hour, with delicious hors d'oeuvres served by Gloria Morch Catering of Westhampton Beach. She also went "over the top," to everyone's amazement, with a wall-to-wall, wrap-around international gourmet buffet later in a huge tent. There were cuisines of many different countries, all around the tent, from Greek to Italian, to Asian, Spanish and American, plus a luscious raw bar, with giant shrimp and fresh clams on the half shell. Guests could walk around the tent sampling food from different countries, or they could simply choose their favorite country cuisine.

This party also had music and dancing by Long Island Sound, and who would think the doctors and their staff are such great dancers? But it is all in the name of physical fitness, and fun!

One of the highlights of the evening was the long tables of amazing prizes for the silent auction. Guests, dressed in black and white, spent over an hour walking around and bidding on a huge selection of prizes, from airplane rides to tickets to their favorite TV shows, to mountain bikes, jewelry and artwork. Renee Brandeis, Silent Auction Chair, Michael Lennon, the Sponsor Chair, and Flora Garsten, the Raffle Chair, should be commended on the superb job they did organizing the auction and raffle, and bringing in such elegant and creative prizes to bid on! What was really creative was how they chose to have the prizes grouped in categories, from "Art and Home" (paintings, vases, trays, carpets, trunks) to "Cuisine & Spirits" (fine wines, dinners and lunches at local restaurants, baskets of cheer) to "Dogs, Cats & Kids" (pet toys and treats, bikes, kids toys).

One of the most fun and exciting categories was "Entertainment," where guests could bid on tickets to numerous TV shows including David Letterman, Conan O'Brien, Regis & Kelly, The Today Show, The View, and All My Children. Another exciting category was "Great Getaways," where people could bid on vacations and short trips to Vermont, Las Vegas, Foxwoods and Mohegan Sun Casinos, and Vail, Colorado, as well as local excursions. As if this wasn't enough, there were more tables with "Fashion," including great jewelry, clothing, and accessories; "Pampering," with spa, nail and hair treatments, and products, and "Sport & Fitness," with lots of golf and tennis outings, clothing and equipment, bikes, health and golf club memberships, and tickets to sports games and outings.

Joan Levan, Benefit Chair, and Rose Mancusi, who assisted with public relations with this benefit, should also be commended for the great success of this event. Everyone had a wonderful time, and many people commented on how much fun they were having. The decorations were also beautiful, as everything was in black and white.

Irwin Gasten, Vice-Chairman of the hospital's Foundation Board, said, "I think the Peconic Medical

OVER THE BARREL...

with Lenn Thompson

News and Notes from Wine Country

Elsewhere in this issue of Dan's Papers, you can read about Spaniard Miguel Martin taking over the winemaking duties at Palmer Vineyards, but that's hardly the only exciting thing going in Long Island's dynamic East End wine world. Here are some news and notes from wine country:

*If you've driven by their tasting room on Main Road in Southold, you've noticed that Bedell Cellars is sporting a new logo. I always like the old logo, but the new one is simple, clean and somewhat modern — and seems more in line with the design of their tasting room.

*On October 1, Bedell will also release the latest member of its Artist's Series family of wines — 2005 Gallery. The wine is a blend of chardonnay, sauvignon blanc and viognier. The label was designed by artist Ross Bleckner and only 200 cases were made. Many of those bottles will be sold to their wine club, so get some if you can.

Osprey's Dominion Vineyards is celebrating its success at the recent 2006 Atlantic Seaboard Vinifera Wine Competition. Their 2002

Reserve Merlot was the most successful Long Island entrant, winning "Best Merlot" and "Best of Show."

This fall, keep an eye out for two new tasting rooms — one for Baiting Hollow Farm Vineyard and one from Diliberto Winery. Baiting Hollow's room will be on Sound Avenue while Sal and Maryann Diliberto will open theirs on Manor Lane in Jamesport. Manor Lane is a little off the wine trail, but the wines are worth the detour.

Are you a fan of ABC's The Bachelor? Visit Castello di Borghese this fall and enjoy their "Taste to Romance Tasting." Marco and Ann Marie Borghese put the tasting together to celebrate the fact that their cousin, Prince Lorenzo Borghese, will be looking for his princess on The Bachelor: Rome.

I've written about the Long Island Merlot Alliance before, and I'm happy to say that the member wineries have finally released their first co-produced wine, Merliance 2004. It sells for $35 per bottle and much of that money goes towards merlot education and research on the East End.

Pick up a bottle or twelve at any member tasting room — Wolffer Estate, Sherwood House Vineyards, Pellegrini Vineyards, Shinn Estate Vineyards and Raphael.

The 2004 vintage of my favorite Long Island dessert wine, Macari Vineyards' Block E, will be released in coming weeks. Look for it the next time you visit Macari for some of the best vineyard views around.

Christopher Watkins, former manager of The Tasting Room on Peconic Lane has taken over the tasting room at Roanoke Vineyards. This poet and former professional musician and brings plenty of knowledge — and a unique perspective — to the Roanoke team. His wife, Amy Marinelli, has also joined the Waters Crest Winery tasting room staff.

Last, but far from least — Lenz Winery's winemaker Eric Fry has released his 2001 Old Vines Merlot. 2001 was a banner year and while Kip Bedell is Mr. Merlot, you could call Fry the Merlot Maestro. This is an age-worthy merlot that may prove to be a benchmark wine for the region.

Mondavi Co., but also has winemaking experience from all over the world.

This really qualifies him to understand the uniqueness of Long Island. "Martin joins a small, but growing group of international winemakers and winemaking consultants, who after working in some of the world's most famous wine regions have come to Long Island's relatively small region to find further success. Others include Macari Vineyards' Paola Valverde and Helmut Gangl, Bedell Cellars' Pascal Marty and Raphael's Paul Pontallier. Clearly this is a reflection of the region's growing reputation in the world wine community. "I wanted a place where I could spend more quality time with my family and do small-scale, hands-on winemaking," Martin said, explaining his reason for coming to Long Island. "I think this region has great potential to make wonderful wine. My goal is to get to know the region and use my experience to produce better wines." Martin, his wife, Ellen, a Spanish teacher in the Southold School District, and their three children are currently living in Southampton. Martin replaces Palmer's previous winemaker, Tom Drozd, who has left the winery but is planning to remain in the local industry.

Center will be the premiere medical institution in Suffolk County. With our new building program, we will be at the leading edge of medicine here."

Josh Horton, former Southold Supervisor, said, "We are lucky to have this great community hospital, where people genuinely care, and the services are top-notch."

Barbara Kolpak, who has worked for 28 years at the admissions department of this hospital, said, "It's a nice, family atmosphere, where co-workers and patients get along great."

Rose Mancusi said after her late husband got ill and went to this hospital, she saw what great care he received, and she was motivated to volunteer her time in public relations to "give back."

Jay Sears, an architect of Quogue, said he supports the hospital "because I feel the life and spirit of this facility surging ahead."

For those who missed this great event, you can still make the Peconic Bay Medical Center's next big benefit, "The Candlelight Ball," scheduled for January 27 at the East Wind in Wading River. For more information, call the Peconic Medical Center Foundation at 631-548-6080.

Blackwells Restaurant

Great Rock Golf Club
141 Fairway Drive
Wading River
631-929-1800

really turned heads in the dining room. The result was plump succulent morsels, full of Mediterranean tastes.

We got the wild mushroom soup with truffles that we had opted to share and Brian sent out a dish of his special Uncle Brian's clam chowder. These were two totally different soups. They were as different as a full-bodied Bordeaux blend and a light Chablis. The mushroom soup was full of deep fall tastes, earthy and assertive, whereas the chowder of delicate texture and taste developed as you drank more of it. There was a wonderful amount of great tasting vegetables to balance the plentiful clams.

The chopped salads with Gorgonzola and the Sicilian styled arugula salad with pine nuts, fennel and oranges were both excellent and highly recommended. For our entrees we chose the 'Sexy shrimp' from the daily specials. I am still not sure of the origin of the name, having forgotten to ask while Daniel again prepared these tableside. Suffice it to say that the garlic, mushrooms, jalapeno, cream and limejuice blend with Tequila made a great tasting dish.

The new menu at Blackwells still offers steak aficionados the best cuts of aged meat but we opted for the Dijon mustard and herb crusted rack of New Zealand lamb that turned out to be absolutely spectacular. This was lamb as it should be, juicy with a delicate taste and cooked to perfection. The accompanying sides of crispy onions and creamed spinach all combined to make this a dish to die for. When the desserts arrived we decided that the tiramisu was probably the best we have ever eaten – it totally restores the true delicacy and lightness of a dish that has been debased over recent years in many establishments. If you want to restore your faith in tiramisu, try Brittany's version. The cheesecake made to Brian's mother's recipe also was extremely light with fresh clean tastes.

The restaurant is open for lunch and dinner and they also offer an excellent bar menu. The wine list is varied and sensibly priced with wines by the glass from $6.50 and by the bottle from $21. Appetizers are from $7 to $12; Main courses and pastas from $16 to $39 for Surf & Turf.

The 'new' Blackwells Restaurant is a lovely place in which to eat, either for a casual meal or for a special occasion. The new enthusiastic management team is dedicated to offering very good quality food to suit all tastes at attractive prices and this is definitely a place to add to your list of favorite restaurants if it is not already there.

A Matter of Taste

Thomas Jefferson said, "Taste cannot be controlled by law."

Though Jefferson was a noted oenophile, wine was probably not the subject of his barbed comment. But it could have been, since all wine consumers today find themselves beset by establishment views on what wine is 'good' and what wine is 'best'.

Jefferson's advice on wine would surely have been to decide for oneself. And to do so based on comparative tasting, something he did when he was in Paris from 1784 to 1789.

There is no substitute for making up one's own mind, based on comparative blind tasting.

In this Jeffersonian spirit, the Lenz Winery wishes to provide East End wine lovers with the same opportunity to taste and compare some of the great wines of the world that is normally only given to 'professional' tasters. We have structured a comparative blind tasting in four flights using many of the wines from a recent professional blind tasting*.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

I don't usually do road tests because I'm a little different from the average car tester in the sense that I don't mince my words. After the car test is printed I usually get hate mail from either readers or the PR departments of the various manufacturers. Long story short, the following is a road test of a 2007 Dodge Caliber.

A week ago, the last thing on my mind was a Dodge Caliber. But I had to make a relatively long trip, the car became available, it was a spanking new vehicle for Chrysler and thus newsworthy. What is truly interesting about the new Dodge Caliber is that it represents all that is good and bad about the new direction American cars are taking, because it is truly a clean sheet of paper.

The design of the Caliber is rather striking. It sorta looks like a Dodge Ram pickup with Robocar overtones, hence the nickname ROBOCAR. Its configuration is that of a five door hatchback, which used to be called a stationwagon. Definitely a compact, with average space inside. The car I drove is nicely equipped, with air conditioning, auto, and all power on the windows and doors. The list price is a very reasonable $16,800, which I'm sure could be bargained down a few bucks at the dealership. Just be aware that these bargain basement cars don't have as much profit in them as a $30,000 SUV and dealers hold on to their prices like grim death. The interior is trendy, with a mixture of plastic materials that seem to be of the same quality as my cell phone. Read average for this class of vehicle. I am particularly fond of the rubberized dashboard; this is the high point of the interior. All in all, with the exception of the visually unique exterior styling, and build quality, this is a slightly above average, low priced American product; although it is light years ahead of the car it replaced, the dated Dodge Neon.

What is certainly not average about the Caliber is the engine and transmission. Finally a modern four banger in a low priced American car. The same motor comes in three sizes, 1.8, 2.0 and 2.4 liter, has double overhead cams and variable valve timing. The two liter in my car produced 158 horsepower at 6,400 rpm and was as smooth and powerful as any Honda V-TEC motor, which is a great compliment indeed. I loved this engine, and you didn't even hear it at idle or at ninety miles per hour.

What is truly fascinating about the Caliber is the automatic transmission, because it is a newly developed, for Chrysler, (CVT) Continuously Variable Transaxle. It is the first to be offered in any Chrysler vehicle, and will probably be the automatic transmission of the future for a lot of vehicles, mainly because it offers better fuel economy. It works on variable changing diameter pulleys that give hundreds of gear ratios to choose from. The transmission takes getting used to, and is a little spooky.

First, on the lower dash mounted gear selector, all one sees is N, D and L ranges. So you really can't hand shift down. Secondly, when you floor the throttle, say, going from zero to sixty, the engine speeds to red line and stays there until you relax the throttle. This is called motorboating. If you've ever driven a motorboat it does the same thing. You floor the throttle and wait for the boat to catch up with the engine. The tranny is strange but works. The car achieved a commendable 29 miles per gallon real world fuel mileage driving 80 to 85 miles per hour for hours on end. Surprisingly, the car actually has a sweet spot at ninety – amazing for an economy car. Just don't go into a sweeping curve at this speed because the suspension is extremely average. Read: be careful, it's underdamped and leans a lot; work is definitely needed in this area. By the way, CVT transmissions are not that new. The Dutch built DAF automobile had one fifty years ago and Subaru had one in its Justy a decade ago.

What's not to like about the Dodge Caliber? Well, the front visibility is way below par. The A-pillars are extremely wide, the dashboard is too high and the windshield seems too narrow. Don't even think of buying this car without an adjustable height front seat, which Dodge makes an option. They should be ashamed, because over the high dashboard, visibility is severely restricted to anyone under 5'10." With the seats raised, visibility is much improved. Speaking of seats, why does one have to buy an expensive car to get comfortable seating? Virtually every low priced car I've ever driven has seats that are too soft. It costs no more to design and build a comfortable seat. Firm 'em up and put some proper support in them. Simple.

American cars are getting better every day. I can't speak about the dependability factor, which is certainly one area in which Detroit has to improve. The new Dodge Caliber is a step in the right direction. I just wish it were less average and more exceptional, especially in the handling department. Only time will tell if this interesting new car turns out to be of the highest caliber.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Welcome Back: Autumn and Ethnic Diversity

After what has been a long and very busy summer, with little contribution to this fine paper, I'm pleased to return for my fourth season writing this column. In the past I've taken this space to gripe about the travails of enduring the oppressive months between Memorial and Labor Days, but there's too much to cover for this first weekend back. Hopefully you followed my advice and got into the city during my hiatus, but if you were as busy as I was out here, it might not have happened. We've had almost three weeks to breathe since the end of summer. A helicopter is probably out of the question, so it's time to hop on the train, the Jitney, the Luxury Liner, or fill up your tank with overpriced gas. I'm here to give you ideas, facts, thoughts and destinations When in Manhattan.

This Saturday marks the Fall Equinox, when the night and day are of equal length. The first day of autumn seems an appropriate time to begin my seasonal column and to introduce a collection of events that have a cultural and ethnic balance akin to that of the equally shared hours of the sun and moon. The Fall Equinox is the main harvest festival of the Wiccan calendar, but it happens to land on some major holidays of more mainstream religions. Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, begins on Saturday and goes through Yom Kippur on Monday, October 2nd. Rosh Hashanah is a joyous celebration and Manhattan is ready for the festivities. In 1654, New York became the first city in North America to honor the High Holy Day. However, it didn't come without some difficulties. Peter Stuyvesant, the Dutch governor of New York at the time, petitioned to have the Jewish "blasphemers" expelled from the city.

Fortunately, the Dutch West India Company brought the fact that he was not running a "religious establishment," but a "business colony" to Stuyvesant's attention. For "the sake of business," Jews were not to be turned away. While this day's roots are ugly, were it not for this sad reasoning, an important segment of New York's multicultural landscape may not be what it is today.

The famously glamorous Waldorf Astoria will be hosting services and continuing its celebration with dinner at Zagat's top-rated Glatt Kosher restaurant, The Prime Grill, at 60 E. 49th St (212-692-9292). The steak and seafood menu, which includes sushi, is outstanding and elegant kosher fare that stands above the standard pastrami and rye. Day meals and more services are scheduled for Chabad of Midtown. The Waldorf's program promises to enrich participants with further insight into High Holiday traditions and customs. Call (212) 972-0770 for reservations and info. On Wednesdays, through April 25, the 92nd Street Y at Lexington Ave. is offering a weekly Israeli Folk-Dance Party with a brief lesson followed by open dancing and advanced instruction.

Depending on where you check, Ramadan, the Muslim month of blessing honored by prayer, fasting, and charity begins on the same day as Rosh Hashanah – Sept. 23rd or the 24th. During this ninth month of the Islamic calendar Muslims believe Allah revealed the first verses of the Qur'an, the holy book of Islam. The faithful adopt an increased sense of generosity and gratitude that already color the true religion. Muslim New Yorkers spend the month communing with one another and sharing good spirit. The area of the city around Lexington and 28th has been called the "Muslim Indo-Pak strip" for its group of food marts, restaurants, halal meat shops and video stores, and has become a pit stop for the many Muslim cabbies cruising the city. During Ramadan the strip is congested with yellow cars and drivers enjoying the sense of community and home that is only natural to want during the holidays. This is the time to get to know and understand your neighbors.

Last but not least, Sunday is the final day of Little Italy's 78th Annual Feast of San Gennaro – Sept. 14-24th. The Italian Catholic celebration of the Patron Saint of Naples, martyred for the faith in 305 A.D., has been a tradition along Mulberry Street since 1926. The feast, brought by immigrants from Naples, consists of a carnival-style street fair rich with food and drink. The 19th is the most religious day featuring a holy procession and mass at the Most Precious Blood Church on Mulberry Street. A parade runs Saturday at 2 p.m. Expect floats, bands, and the statue of San Gennaro carried through the streets. Don't forget to eat some delicious sausage and peppers and, my favorite, Zeppoles – a sinful fried dough and powdered sugar treat you can eat in the name of the Lord.

JUST FOR KIDS

Too Cool For School

If you've been seeing flashes of yellow lately, you're not the only one. The other day, rushing to drop my son off at my mother's, I sat behind a school bus that seemed to stop every two feet. Groups of 2, 3 or 4 students walked onto the bus with still-sleepy yawns, half-closed eyes and backpacks carelessly slung across their shoulders. Every backpack, messenger bag and notebook they carried seemed to be emblazoned with an insignia – either self-created, computer-generated or embroidered, making the school supplies as unique as the student carrying them.

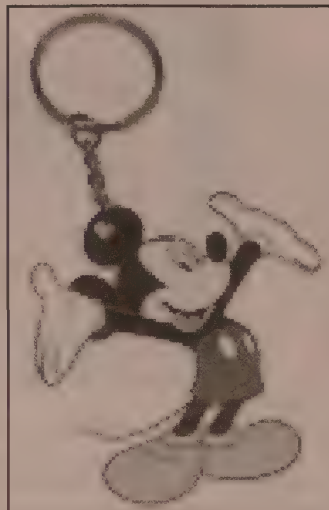

Lockers provide a daunting challenge for even the most organized student. So take a 6th grader in total shock of their new middle school environment – nervous to find friends who share the same lunch period, gym period or English class and you throw in the need for 2 notebooks and a folder for each subject, and a big metal locker with a combination – and it can make for pure confusion and chaos. Knowing that they have 3 minutes to get their supplies and get to their next period requires careful precision and organization. I've noticed many students using neon stickers to mark their books, folders and workbooks. Color-coding their supplies in a way that has special meaning to them helps a lot of the kids whip out what they need and get to class on time.

Stickers can be fun for just personalizing your notebooks. I-Pods aren't allowed in school, but a picture of an I-pod on your notebook surrounded by stickers of your favorite music group can make taking notes in that History book just a bit more fun. You are more apt to remember the music-covered notebook, take it home and do the required work and not face the music for forgetting it in school. Stickers of cats, dogs, flowers, cars, and stars and stripes can turn that boring composition notebook into something festive.

Glitter pens and rhinestones can offer a decorative touch to that loose-leaf binder. Write your name with the fancy glitter pen, let it dry and decorate all around it in rhinestones or flat beads. You'll be sure to spot that binder in your locker. Mark the "binding" of the binder with the subject name in glitter glue, let it dry and put a piece of contact paper over it to seal it for the year. The added decorative perk will make the subject fun and ensure that you can find that bulky binder in a pinch.

Backpacks have become a necessary evil for almost every student. While they are sturdy and roomy, often they are just not as attractive as you want them to be. The pretty ones might not be roomy enough and the sturdiest ones are just not going to look great with every outfit. So you need to make it your own. Bracelets seem to be the biggest trend around. I've seen many students who macrame or buy ready-made bracelets in various colors and hang them from their backpacks. Key-chains also make great decorations. Just returned from a trip to Disney? Mickey Mouse looks great hanging off the zipper of a backpack. Bad spelling test? Just look at Mickey dangling off the side of the bag and it's sure to bring a smile to any child's face.

Lands End has a variety of backpacks in all styles, colors and sizes and the best part, you can have them monogrammed. Put your child's initials on the bag or the name of their favorite sports team and the pack becomes all their own. Many parents iron patches of sports team insignias, cartoon characters or music groups. They look great and make for some school fun. The other day I saw a shy child walk down the hallway carrying a backpack with "Go Yankees" written on it with a Sharpie pen and it made for instant conversation in the hallways as other kids yelled after him, "Did you catch last night's game?" and "Way to go Yankees."

If you're handy with a needle, don't hesitate to stitch a personalized design on that backpack. Print out a pattern from the computer and go to town with some embroidery thread. It's simple and fun. Yarn works well, too. I've seen a lot of students with yarn threaded through the rings of their notebooks for a rainbow effect.

Who says that school can't be exciting? Take those supplies and jazz them up for a little bit of in-class creativity. Be inventive and make them your own...a little color and a bit of time can make learning much more fun.

SOUTHAMPTON HIGH DOES BROADWAY

By Emily Hart Post
With a little help from Katlean de Monchy and David Post

Two shows hit Southampton this summer; one was Annie, which I went to and Little Shop of Horrors, which Dad thought I was a little young for. The kids who performed were really good; my favorite was Annie's Miss Hannigan, played by Emily Roberts. The shows were put on at Southampton High School, by "STAGES," a children's theatre workshop. Look for their next performances. Your kids will have lots of fun.

Remember to tell us about events in NYC and the Hamptons. Maybe we'll be there. Email david@star-inme.com . Thanks.

Antique Chic

Antiques are a charming way to add character to any home, but naturally acquiring an aged look can take generations. A piece of furniture with worn edges and distressed paint used to mean that it had been around for years, maybe given to us by our grandparents or bought at an antique store. Today, a piece of furniture with an aged look can actually be brand new, and considered both chic and stylish. It is now possible to create the illusion that we've inherited and taken care of something for years, when in reality it was just recently purchased at a local furniture store.

There are several ways to give a new piece of furniture or wall hanging a lived-in look, without waiting a lifetime. Recreating the effects of love and use that are typically found in genuinely aged furniture can be inexpensive, but take some effort. If you have never antiques before, start with a small item such as a picture frame or mirror. This will allow you to get the hang of it and experiment with different techniques. Antiquing methods can also be used to salvage a damaged piece of furniture or wall hanging that would otherwise be thrown away.

The easiest way to give a piece of furniture or wall hanging an heirloom expression is by using paint or stain. When choosing which to use, there are many factors to consider. Ultimately, the decision should be based on your own personal taste and style. Think about what you want the finished piece to look like and where it will be displayed. If you want to see an old paint color under the distressed areas, as if it had been painted many times, you will need to choose colors for both the basecoat and topcoat. If you want the distressed areas to reveal bare wood, you will only need one paint color. If you prefer a wood stain finish, choose a stain color that will appropriately match the surrounding decor in the room where it will be placed.

Begin by lightly sanding the item you want to antique, even if it has been previously painted or polished. Use sandpaper to smooth out rough edges, making sure not to go against the grain, or the wood will be scratched. Once the sanding is completed, wipe down the item with a piece of tack cloth to remove any remaining dust. To give the wood a tattered look, use methods that will mar the surface such as scratching and gauging. This works best by using tools such as a steel brush or even a rock.

Before you paint or stain, applying a coat of primer is recommended but it is not required. If you have decided to use paint and want bare wood exposed, paint the entire piece one color. If you want color exposed, consider a brighter color for the base coat so it shows up through the topcoat of paint. Once the paint has dried, there are several distressing techniques. For bare wood exposure, sand areas that would naturally get distressed, including corners that could easily be nicked and places that would have been held by hands. This will give it a weathered look that is common with antiques. If you choose to have paint showing through, rub candle wax on the areas you want distressed after applying the basecoat. Then, paint over the basecoat and wax with the topcoat. Once the topcoat has dried, use steel wool to reveal the color underneath. Rub it on the waxed areas, and then use the tack cloth again to remove dust. If you choose to use a stain finish, apply the desired amount to the piece of furniture and let it dry. To give the piece a classic look, use a towel or rag to apply the stain finish. For all methods, applying a polyurethane stain upon completion can protect and enhance your work.

Using these antiquing techniques will instantly add age and charm to your furniture, and can be further personalized by using stencils or wood embellishments. Whichever faux finish you choose, whether applied to a piece as small as a picture frame or as large as an entertainment center, it will retain its beauty while looking convincingly like an antique.

Swinging Indoors

Fall is fast approaching. The sun will begin setting earlier each evening and the chilly weather that comes with the season means people will start staying indoors after work or school, instead of relaxing or playing games outside. Being stuck inside the house is a dreadful way to spend an afternoon or evening, unless you enjoy sitting on your couch watching television and checking e-mails. A person can only do so much indoors before frantically searching for ways to make the time pass. There is one indoor activity coming to mind that loads of people will enjoy. However, there is a different and possibly more exciting way to round the bases indoors.

"Hitting is better than sex," Hall of Fame baseball player Reggie Jackson once said. Therefore, in order to guarantee yourself a joyous fall, invest in an indoor batting cage.

Creating your own indoor batting cage is relatively simple with today's technology. The hardest part may possibly be fundraising for the costly cage. If money is no object, set up a cage in your house to truly understand Reggie Jackson's comment on hitting.

The first step in the process of installing a batting cage in your home is finding the proper place to hit like Joe DiMaggio. A basement or garage would make a decent batting area. But if your significant other doesn't mind setting up the hitting area anywhere in your house, why not put one in the living room or kitchen?

Once a suitable spot is located, start ordering the equipment needed for your indoor paradise. Depending on the amount of money set aside to purchase the items and how skillful an athlete you are, an electronic pitching machine sending softballs or baseballs to the plate ranging from 40-95 miles per hour can be purchased for around $1,400. This device is made for Little League level players or professional athletes. Strictly for your Little Leaguer, a machine pitching the ball from 30-60 miles per hour is more reasonable. The cost of the slower pitching machine is around the range of $500. Professional or serious baseball players may prefer a pitching machine with the capability of throwing a 95 mile per hour fastball or a 75 mile per hour curve ball during the same session. This high tech piece of machinery costs in the ballpark of $2,400.

A cheaper way to have batting practice would entail buying a pitcher's L-Screen and Net for about $200 and putting it in the batting area. Then the hitters can have their parents, siblings, or friends throw them strikes, while the person heaving the ball can practice their pitching form.

However, no batting should take place without a net to stop the ball when it is pitched and missed or hit. Having a batting cage without a net would cause lots of problems since the ball would ricochet off the furniture. Some professional baseball teams spend close to $700 for nylon nets to stop the batting practice balls. A less expensive option, ranging from $450-$520, is called KVX200™. This material is lightweight, doesn't absorb water, and resists breakdown in direct sunlight and can also be used outside if the indoor batting cage turns into an outdoor one during the summer.

The nets will not work properly unless there is a frame in which the net can be hung. Batting cage frames with all the supplies necessary to set it up will cost in the area of $175-$775, depending on the length of the frame and the items that are included. A heavy-duty backdrop for $130 should be set up on the frame behind the batter's box. This way when a batter swings and misses, the ball will not hit the back wall. The ball will hit the backdrop and fall down to the ground, saving the walls around the house from unnecessary damage.

A batter's mat is an optional item that will let the hitter know where to stand. However, a hitting area can be created by taping the floor; save yourself $250 and spend your money on other items.

The leftover money can go towards the dimpled balls that are used for the pitching machine. A box of a dozen dimpled baseballs will cost close to $30, while twelve dimpled softballs will set you back $35. And don't forget a bat. It will be hard to hit without one.

Now that you are all ready to swing for the fences, make sure to wear protection. Remember to purchase a batting helmet, that is, before stepping up to the plate.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Remembering Pets

The garden is a "mirror up to nature," much like a theater in which we witness the changing of seasons and the comings and goings of animals passing through. It often reflects the owner's life, and can reflect the sadness and disappointments as deer eat up a patch of Hostas and loving pets pass on. Over the years at Rock Cottage, we have witnessed all of these events, as well as the amazing perseverance of animals as they move past the obstacles and live on.

One topic I know touches the hearts of gardeners is how to handle the death of a pet. It is a gardener's dilemma in the same way as any family death. Some folks think the death of a pet does not deserve much thought, and discard their pets' remains along roadways or in wooded areas. Forget those people, I say – they are dangerous and unfeeling. Handling the death of a pet and putting it to rest is as important as having a pet in the first place.

Pet deaths are especially meaningful to children. I recall the sensitivity with which my father helped bury numerous hamsters, reptiles, birds, dogs, cats, and fish. These memories are part of the fond memories I have of childhood; I can recall each and every one of the little shoeboxes and plots that spotted the garden where I grew up to this day.

Many pet owners never think about pet death until their veterinarian asks them what to do with their pet's body. The first factor to consider, of course, is one's feelings about death, loss, and remembrance. You want to preserve the pet's memory, and your decision should be based on how you think that memory can be best preserved.

The lovely Penelope

There are really three options for handling a pet's death: burial at home, burial in a pet cemetery, or cremation. Each of these can be a fitting final act of farewell and closure.

Burying a pet at home keeps it close and part of daily life. It is also a way of lessening the sense of loss for people who had a special bond with their pets. I was recently asked to attend a pet funeral in the garden of one of our dear neighbors who was burying her cat. What a pleasure it was to share in the good words, communion with others, and to express love for the pet in that secluded spot. We all went away ready to move on.

Home burials are also an opportunity to create a permanent memorial to a pet. There are many companies that provide grave markers for these purposes. One of the best is a company called "Memories Engraved" that can be accessed via the Internet at www.memoriesengraved.com. If you choose to bury a pet at home, make sure the grave is deep enough to ensure the pet's remains will not be disturbed or become a health hazard. Some cities prohibit home burials, so check local laws first and never bury a pet in a flowerbed that will be re-dug. It is also not a good option if you rent your home or are likely to move away from the property.

In such circumstances, there are pet cemeteries that can assist you. Nearly every state offers sites for the formal burial of pets. This approach ensures that the pet's remains will be undisturbed and cared for in perpetuity. The one drawback is that cemetery burials can be costly. However, many people find it comforting to handle a pet's death in this way.

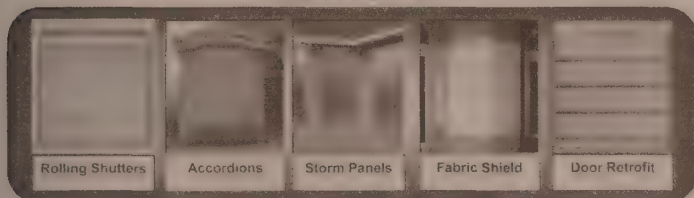

Cremation is another option, and most veterinarians will assist you with this service. You can ask to have the remains returned for burial at home, or for display in an urn. This approach allows you to keep the pet with you, and certainly does not break any laws or pose health concerns. A pet's ashes can also be spread in the garden, or in a spot that provides a sense of liberation from grief.

Because we do not expect to move from Rock Cottage, our preference is for home burial. Two of our pets are now buried in the garden, and it gives us a sense of connection to know they are there. As a demonstration of our ongoing love for our lost pets, we plant a yearly display of flowers by each grave, which is marked with a granite stone, that commemorates these wonderful animals.

Destination Restoration

The Hamptons are simply chock-full of old towns full of old houses full of old stuff. The traditional Hamptons style was pretty much established over one hundred years ago, which means that whenever you see an old shingled house with a barn-style roof, or little, rectangular white-trimmed windows, you are looking at a piece of Hamptons history. And although these are some of the most coveted properties right in the center of town, some people who buy houses like these are tempted to just rip out the old and install the new into these old shingled grannies, simply because taking care of a house that is crumbling from the inside out leaves very little time for going to the beach. However, some pieces should be restored and preserved; who can resist the glow of an old glass lamp or the feel of a well-used wooden chair?

The little things in an antique house, like light fixtures, furniture, carved mantle pieces and banisters, are some of the easiest and most delightful objects to restore and reuse.

When my family was renovating our house, we were in the process of demolishing a hideous plaster banister constricting our staircase when we hit gold. Well, a sort of fool's gold, actually. What we hit was brass, a beautiful Victorian-style brass banister to be exact. Apparently, the previous owners of the house wanted to modernize a classic beauty; at least they didn't rip it out. When we saw this lovely gleaming rail, we knew that it could be saved with just some polish, a paint job, and a touch of TLC. While the brass was dirty from all that plaster dust, it had been protected, so all the top railing needed was a thorough cleaning and a good polish. Then we sealed it with a high quality protectant so that it would keep its brilliant sheen. We could have stripped the paint from the support rails and tried to polish those too, but we liked the look of the painted rails, so we simply stripped them and threw on a fresh coat of paint. And just like that, our new old house had twice as much character as before. Best of all, we didn't have to build a new banister.

If your home lacks antique character of its own, yard sales, antique shops, and even antiquing new items yourself are an easy way to add charm where charm is needed. Once you have found your antique treasure, it usually needs some work before it can stand up to the wear-and-tear of modern life. If the frame of the piece is intact and useable, and the problem is simply a decaying wicker seat or cushion, these are easily replaced. For wicker replacement, you are probably going to have to enlist the help of an expert. You can always call one of the many professional restorers in the Hamptons for guidance, or have them complete your project for you.

One of the easiest restoration projects you can complete yourself is replacing a damaged seat or cushion on an otherwise useable antique chair. If the wood looks a little shabbier than you want it, just give it a good once-over with a damp cloth, then sand and stain it. In order to replace a cushioned seat, all you need to do is trace the shape of the old seat, or the place where the seat used to sit, and cut a half-inch thick wooden board to fit. Then, you can either purchase a ready-made cushion or make your own.

If you prefer a permanent cushioned seat, simply choose your fabric, synthetic stuffing, and an inch-thick piece of foam. Cut the foam to match the size and shape of the seat, then staple it into place; one staple in the center should do. Then, cut your fabric, making sure to add an extra few inches on all four sides so that it will fit over the stuffing and still leave enough fabric to secure the cushion to the bottom of the board. Place your fabric over the secured foam, and duct tape the excess to the underside of the board on all but one side of the seat. Then, stuff the cushion with the loose synthetic stuffing to your desired firmness and tightly staple the fabric to the underside of the board. Place your new seat into the old chair frame and take a seat; after all, you've earned it!

The Nicest of Nooks

The dictionary defines "nook" as (1) a secluded place, or (2) a corner or recess. Most people would agree that these two definitions are not mutually exclusive when it comes to the ideal conception of a nook. Window seats, corner spaces in a room, areas under stairwells, attics and so forth, can all qualify as nooks. But above all else, a nook must be cozy, or at least have the capacity of being made into something cozy, and that usually implies a human touch. And nowhere is this more appreciated than in the kitchen.

A kitchen is not normally regarded as a "secluded place" per se, but if an alcove doesn't already exist, it is quite easy to section off a part of the room to create a nook. A screen, bookcase, or curtain would certainly do the trick. The options are limited only by your imagination.

The heart and soul of any home is the kitchen. It has been that way for generations. Inevitably, family members or invited guests to your home eventually wind up sitting in the kitchen – not just to eat or drink, but to share intimate conversations and to feel, well...just comfortable and cozy. These days, many homeowners are embracing the idea of creating a small, inviting space in their kitchen that is offset from the main eating area – a place where a person can sit down and enjoy a cup of coffee or a small meal with a few family members or close friends; a place that is intimate and warm. The answer to such desires is the breakfast nook.

Breakfast nooks are making a resurgence in the home building and remodeling industries. Homeowners are rediscovering the value of having a cozy, well-lit place to enjoy meals in the comfort of their own kitchen. And with a large variety of design possibilities available to choose from, everything from an actual secluded "nook" built off the kitchen to more open designs, there are options out there to fit almost any homeowner's fancy.

The traditional breakfast nook is a snug, windowed area just off the kitchen that fits a small table with benches or chairs. Usually looking out on a backyard or garden area, these additions provide a space for close social interaction or quiet contemplation without your having to leave the comfort of your kitchen for other places in the home. While this inviting scenario can be a wonderful place to gather or escape, some homeowners may find that secluded feeling a little too confining.

There's no need to worry. Your nook doesn't need to be a semi-separate enclave. Many current designs incorporate an open, well-lit plan that is nothing more than an extension of the kitchen, separated by a change in flooring or color to signify it is an independent and special area. Regardless of your preferences, traditional or more modern, there is a design out there to suit your needs.

While the basic architectural structure of your nook will provide it with a character in and of itself, what you choose to incorporate into that area will play just as big a role in creating an inviting feeling. Even something as simple as the type of table you choose will create a certain ambience. For the more traditional architectural designs, homeowners often go with a table and benches or a booth, making for a more communal and cozy feel. For an open design, a table and set of regular chairs are more appropriate as they can be configured easier to fit the area. In addition to furniture choices, painting your breakfast nook a warm and inviting color and installing welcoming window treatments will go a long way in making your refuge a place where you'll want to spend your mornings.

Another thing to consider when creating your nook is what lies on the other side of the window. Backyard facing alcoves are nice in that you get to enjoy looking out upon flower gardens and other attractive foliage, as well as the occasional wildlife that may appear on your lawn. And if you've got a great view at your disposal, by all means make sure you take that into account when you decide where your nook will be built. If you've been looking for a cozy and inviting spot to begin and end your day, a breakfast nook might be just the solution you've been looking for.

GEORGE THANK YOU

You changed our lives.

Before we bought the Marquis Spa from you, our lives were completely boring. My husband was never home, he worked 18 hours a day at his law firm.

To keep busy, I jogged, joined volunteer groups, shopped 'til I dropped.

We never saw each other. It was terrible.

Since you installed the spa, our lives have really changed.

The warm water bubbling from those therapeutic heads completely relaxes us.

Look at this picture. We spent a fortune on different backdrops to fit our every mood. This one is a wooded lake. Another one is a deserted tropical beach. And another is...well it's just too personal to talk about.

Now we spend all of our time together, in our new spa.

Its wonderful... except he stopped going to work and lost his job.

If I can get him out of the spa, can you give him a job?

Fall In Love With Fall Colors

With summer slowly fading away, warm breezes are being gently replaced with crisp fall air; the barbecues are being stored away as we all return back to our comfy couches and cozy living rooms. But the cool air isn't the only thing the fall is sweeping in this season. Fall hues like eggplant, brick red, gold and burnt orange are all the rage to keep your favorite family rooms nice and toasty in the cooler months. Luckily for us, Long Island is bursting with local color that can be incorporated into any style room or décor. You'd be surprised where you may find ways to include the hottest trends into your home by just visiting your local farmers market, or even your own backyard. Everyone can experiment with a little taste of color this season- it might have you falling for fall.

You can find inspiration for color anywhere. Harvest time brings in not only great food and wine on Long Island, but also ways to make your home burst with color all season long. You may find that by adding even the smallest bit of bold color an entire room becomes enchanting.

It's easy to get started. If you are feeling a little shy about ditching all those neutral shades, like beige and white, start small. Try out these easy decorating tips to incorporate the warmest no fuss fall colors in your home.

Color: Amber and rustic orange

These colors bring instant warmth as our days grow shorter and cooler. The touch of sunlit hues will make any room toasty!

How to do it:

Gather up some leaves (real or artificial) and bunch them together in a vase for a centerpiece. Pick some deep red apples and display them in a bowl. You can even venture out pumpkin picking for the perfect colored arrangement on a window sill or end table.

Where it works:

These warm tones work well in kitchen areas where they can be accompanied by the welcoming aromas of cookies and pies.

Color: Eggplant and wine colors

These deep reds and purples bring a luxurious and dramatic touch to a room.

How to do it: Wine bottles make for a very lush feeling in any room. Most of the time, the labels themselves are works of art.

Where it works:

Display your local labels on a mantel or decorative wine rack. However, plan on this interior design to be temporary. Hopefully you won't only be displaying the wine, but enjoying them as well.

Color: Golden yellows and greens

How to do it:

Local farmers markets are bursting with fresh squash and gourds. These simple and natural elements can make a beautiful center piece. Arrange different sizes and colors in a bowl for fabulous fall décor.

Where it works: Your coffee table or breakfast nook.

Color: Browns and earth tones

How to do it:

Local markets usually have dried Indian corn that can be easily arranged into bouquets for your front door or entrance way. You can even use the kernels at the base of a glass bottle for a simple centerpiece.

Another way to incorporate earth tones into your home is by gathering wheat into a simply chic arrangement. Use your clear bottle with the corn kernels for a vase.

Where it works: This simple fall touch can add color to a bathroom or bedroom.

Color: Reds

How to do it: Red has always been associated with passion and excitement. Why not add a little to your home? Start small. I'm talking, cherry tomato small. You can find great looking (and tasting) tomatoes in the most beautiful shades of not only red, but yellow, green and orange.

Where it works: Definitely a kitchen counter or table. This tasty centerpiece will warm up any room.

These are just a few ways to incorporate local color into your home this fall. You'll find it's fun and easy to get started once you venture out to your local farm stand or even your own backyard. Who needs summer when autumn brings its own natural warmth? Especially when you're on Long Island, where rich local colors are everywhere.

Not Just For Buried Treasure

Have an old, dusty trunk buried away in your attic? While garage sale hopping, did you walk right past a trunk without giving it a second look? Now is the time to uncover the mysteries and charm of that antique trunk and give it new life as a decorative piece in your home.

Trunks, luggage, and travel bags have been a European and American tradition dating back to the 1600 and 1700s. Devoting much time, effort, and skill, trunk makers created these vessels for a variety of people, including circus performers, travelers, salesmen, immigrants, doctors, and bankers. Many people used their trunks for carting and storing their belongings and supplies, whether they were en route or at home. It's truly remarkable that over 300 years later, people are still utilizing their trunks for similar reasons of carting, storage, and decoration. Time and time again, trunks prove to possess the beautiful qualities of form and function.

As trunks contain special histories, they also come in a garden variety — doll, flat tops, round tops, stagecoach, Jenny Lind, Saratoga, wardrobe, and hat trunks. Embellished qualities also add intrigue as coverings and interiors were carefully crafted as well. Many trunks are covered in canvas (originally in animal hides) and embossed patterns, along with fabric linings, manufacturers' labels, and paintings of people and decorative scenes, and have multiple compartments.

When you acquire a trunk of your own, be sure to ask about the year and make, along with any additional history specific to that trunk. Take the time to examine the exterior and interior of the trunk to discover its unique details.

According to Paul Pat Morse, professor of Trunkology and author of Antique Trunks, Identification and Price Guide, Antique Trunks, Refinish, Repair, Restore, and (The Original) Antique Trunks, Identification and Price Guide, trunk collecting has become very popular within the last ten years as people have been using them for decorative and storage purposes. Since trunks are being sold at accelerated rates, their availability is decreasing. Some research is necessary in locating a particular trunk of interest. Trunks can also be found at garage sales, antique auctions and stores, estate sales, specialty trunk stores, and possibly in your own attic or basement — it's just a matter of taking the time to look! If all else fails, you can always resort to eBay.com to make your purchase. Morse also explains that trunks range in value based upon their original construction, condition, and aging process.

Once you get involved in searching for and buying a trunk, some decisions need to be made. Do you want to restore the trunk or leave it in its found condition? If you choose to restore, will you take on this intensive process or will you seek out antique trunk restorers (who can easily be found on the Internet)? Once you've made those decisions, it's time to decide on its function.

Many people use their trunks for storage, decoration, a piece of history, or incorporate all those possibilities. According to Morse, "You can turn a flat top steamer trunk into a distinctive coffee table or use a dome top trunk to store your winter woolens or quilts." With that said, you can be as creative as you'd like with your trunk in showcasing and utilizing its beauty. No matter the placement and usage of your trunk, it will definitely be a positive addition to your home, and receive great reactions from family, friends, and guests.

Following are some possible decorative and storage ideas on how you can incorporate trunks within your home. Trunks can be used as plant stands, accents to display vase and china collections, end and night tables, and coffee and cocktail tables. They can fit beautifully in children's bedrooms for doll and toy storage and can be used in adults' bedrooms for blanket and sweater storage. Instead of opting for a bookshelf, a trunk will give any home study or office a hint of charm, along with a neat and useful storage solution — it will also make you look studious and worldly. If all else fails, a word from my father and trunk enthusiast, "Take my advice and don't think twice — if you have junk, just throw it in the trunk."

Trunks also add a sense of pride and history to any room, as a reminder of American and European culture. You and your family can devote time in researching the trunk's origin or you can easily make up creative scenarios of the people and usages that once "belonged" to the trunk — either way, it makes for interesting dinner conversation.

When Lassie Doesn't Come Home

One of a pet owner's worst nightmares is that the pet will run away. This happens more often than people might think, given the number of missing pet signs (especially during the summer) and the success of pet-finder professionals. Of course, dogs and cats are most likely to run off. Only rarely are missing turtles and llamas in the news, and an Internet search yields no results for reports of missing goldfish. As for dogs and cats, there are certain precautions that can be taken to help ensure that your pet does not run off.

Most of the precautions would seem obvious, but they seem worthy of discussion. While almost all precautions apply equally to dogs and cats, let us first discuss one that pertains almost exclusively to dogs — training. (It is generally believed that cats cannot be trained to respond to commands; I am not a cat person, so I take this on faith.)

No dog should ever be allowed off leash anywhere outside before it has thoroughly mastered certain commands. First on leash and then off leash in an enclosed area and then again off leash outside, a dog must learn to stop and freeze upon the command "No" and to return to its owner upon the command "Come." "Sit" and "Down" are also important commands. This way, if the dog runs off, either to chase something or out of curiosity, you can issue a series of commands: "No," then "Come," then "Sit." At that point, your dog will be sitting and looking up to you.

Depending on the breed and personality, some dogs take to this training better than others, and some dogs are more responsive to chase triggers than others. The key point, however, is that all dogs can be trained. In this regard, I recommend the book Dog Training by

Bash. Bashkim Dibra is a go-to trainer for celebrities, and he has (among other things) trained a wild wolf. As dogs descend from wolves and have the same instincts, including the desire to be part of a pack with a hierarchical structure, if a wild wolf can be trained, so can any dog. I relied on this book when I trained Pete, my golden retriever.

If your dog or cat is to be left outside alone (or might escape from the house somehow), it is important to have a real or electronic fence. As for real fences, because dogs are not climbers, virtually any fence will do. I have a four-foot high, state-compliant pool fence behind and on the sides of my house. This is quite sufficient to keep Pete in — although my friend Heidi's dog has managed to learn how to open the self-latching gate, so it appears that even regular fences are not perfect for every dog.

Many cats can climb, so a regular fence may not be enough. A mail-order company called Purr-fect Fence (www.purrfectfence.com) sells a flexible fence that arches inward on the top. Even if a cat can maneuver up the wiggly fence (the company says that most cannot), it will not be able to get around the arch. A 100-foot system costs $795, with discounts for multiple systems.

Some people with cats build outdoor cat enclosures, which can vary in size and shape. These enclosures, rather than fence in the entire yard, create a smaller safe haven for the cat to move around or play. There are all sorts of do-it-yourself kits available, and Internet research suggests that cat owners are happy with this concept. I cannot speak for cat owners, but I cannot image that many dogs would be happy being confined to a small-ish enclosure, especially if its people are outside of the enclosure. Dogs are curious and also have a need to be with their pack.

For people who would like their pet to be free to roam about without a fence, there are electric fences. Using an underground wire, transmitter system and special collar, the electric fence provides first a warning sound and then a light shock to the pet as it approaches and then crosses the boundary. The intensity of the shock can be set lower or higher for different breeds and personalities. Electric fences are common for dogs, and Internet research suggests (counter-intuitively to this cat ignoramus) that electric fences are available for cats, too.

While electric fences are popular and, apparently, safe, they do go against the method of training I learned, which places a premium on positive reinforcement and recommends only non-physical negative reinforcement. I would rather have Pete trained to listen to my commands, or keep him in the fenced-in backyard, than allow him to wander around the front-yard receiving electric shocks from time to time.

A final matter is worth discussing. I allow Pete to wander through my low-traffic development unsupervised. Over the years, I have come to trust that Pete will always come home, and I believe that he is not wandering off to the major nearby road. Part of my comfort stems from the fact that I know Pete will not chase deer, and there are very few squirrels around. But should he ever run off, or worse, get hit by a car, I have only myself to blame. It is an unwise practice, and I suggest that readers do as I say and not as I do.

Ethan Allen Style Studio

Often, the most difficult aspect of home decorating is starting. And it's this indecision that usually lulls individuals into complacency – they decide that it is easier to live with tattered sofa cushions and scratched table surfaces than to put together a home they love in which to live and entertain. However, by approaching the decorating process with an open mind, people will realize, according to one expert at Ethan Allen, that decorating is actually quite fun.

"It's a very creative process," explains Jennifer Kaelin, a design consultant. "Homes should not only be beautiful and comfortable, but reflective of the homeowner's personal style. I don't think people realize how easy it is, particularly since the possibilities for design are pretty endless."

If you long to give your home a face-lift, but just don't know where to begin, the following are basic steps to help you begin pulling together the home of your dreams.

Decorating 101

Define Your Style. Do the graceful lines and light finishes of European Country make you long to summer in Provence? Or would you rather kick back surrounded by graphic silhouettes and bold colors? If you really don't know what your style is, start looking in fashion and home decorating magazines. "Just tear out the pictures that speak to you and compile a scrapbook," suggests Kaelin.

The Art of Mixing. "It's okay not to want to get rid of everything you already have," says Kaelin. "You can build around that buffet Grandma gave you or that Persian rug that you found while vacationing." The truth is, with so many styles available on the market today, you are bound to find the one that suits your taste and works with your existing home furnishings.

A Beautiful Backdrop Is A Great Beginning. According to Kaelin, all too often people shy away from color, due to their fear of making a mistake. She suggests choosing a few shades, buying a small quantity of each and painting a strip of each on one wall in the room you are decorating. Live with the colors for a few days," she adds, "and then make your final decision." Or, you can go with the alternative to painting – wallpaper!

Embrace Patterns. Way back when, only one fabric was seen in a room. Now, half the fun of decorating is exploring the wide array of choices that you have. "You'd be surprised at how many different types of patterns look fantastic together," muses Kaelin. "Fabrics that you wouldn't think would coordinate, put them together and it's like, 'Wow.'"

Enlighten Yourself. The right lighting makes all the difference in a room, in terms of both function and atmosphere. According to Kaelin, each room should have three to five different types of lighting. Shop for table lamps, sconces, chandeliers, and floor lamps.

A Harvest-Inspired Palette. Autumn is abundant in mellow, earthy color. Deep yellow and brown, rich red, soothing green, and robust orange can be used in any home and with any style. Look for them in everything from pottery to leather upholstery and decorative pillows.

Rich Textures. For the fall, mix up textures for a more luxurious feel. Incorporate bamboo, rattan, leather, and damask, as well as details like bullion fringe and nail-head trim for a look that is visually striking and tantalizing to the touch.

The Warmth of Wood. The radiant glow of wood furnishings generates warmth, thanks to rich grains like cherry and maple, interesting finishes, and extraordinary detailing that includes banding and marquetry.

Menswear-Inspired Fabrics. For decades, the way he's dressed has been an inspiration to everyone from women's fashion designers to car manufacturers. Handsome patterns and fabrics like plaid, tartan, tweed, and leather offer a highly desirable crisp, tailored look. This fall, look for his most classic looks to dress up everything from sofas to window treatments.

The American Classics. Today's hottest furnishing trend pays homage to America's past. Delicately scaled classic silhouettes are inspired by antiques. Queen Anne and Chippendale style fill rooms with timeless elegance and a modern perspective. Add in conventional fabrics in a contemporary color palette and striking decorative accessories with compelling detailing and you have a scintillating twist on tradition.

Devoted To Découpage

Fall has returned, and its arrival brings with it thoughts of colors, textures and smells associated with the notion of family and tradition. For some people, a seasonal change instinctively signals the need for a change in their interior decor. These days, there are a great number of people who feel the need for change, but believe that they have less time to devote to such undertakings (it's true even out here in the Happy Hamptons). Fortunately, there are two ways to enhance any room or piece of furniture that take little to no time and experience: découpage and stencil decorating.

The art of découpage has existed for many years. It has been said that it originated in France (the word is French, meaning to 'cut out') dating back to the 12th century. Today découpage is still a very popular form of art and decoration, used for an array of things like furniture, trays, vases, and much more. Simulating painting, découpage is an original arrangement of cut-outs, paste-ons used on pictures, murals, and other accessories.

Making something in découpage is not only easy but also personalizes your items and can serve as a very special gift for someone close. With a sharp pair of scissors and good vision, anyone with a fair sense of composition and color can make professional looking work. Materials can be found just about anywhere – in art supply stores, thrift and antique shops, bookstores, attics and garage sales. Magazines, wallpaper, gift wrappings, posters, travel folders and cards are all excellent materials as well.

By following a few simple steps you can get started. First, choose the item that you wish to decorate and decide on a simple or existing theme to create the perfect accessory to your room. Let's say you wish to have a beach theme for your master bedroom, and would like to découpage your trunk with beach scenes and shells.

Make sure that the surface is clean and free from dust. Then, you must cover the surface with all-purpose glue (keep a damp cloth handy for excess paste). Also, be sure to lay out your design prior to applying the glue. Apply in any fashion or forms desired and allow your objects to dry completely. Lastly, it is up to your discretion if you wish to apply a lacquer finish. Lacquer comes in spray-on cans and is very effective for large pieces, allowing them to appear to recede into the background, simulating painting.

Now that you have one item in your room decorated in tribute to the beach, it's time to move on to the next décor change. If the white walls in your room feel plain and dull as the light begins to dim in the fall weather, an easy way to make a room feel elegant, stylish, warm and well-designed is through the simple task of stencil decorating.

It is important to research stencil designs and narrow down your choices of style. Also, you should note that stencil decorating can take place anywhere, not just as a border of a room. You can stencil the back of a wooden chair, drawer panels or the top of a bar stool to coordinate with your kitchen decor. Everyday items like flower pots, wastepaper baskets and book ends can be instant works of art.

To create a border, you will need paint, a pattern, scissors, measuring tape and a pencil. First, you will want to use a tape measure and a pencil for guide lines. A tip for holding your stencil in place while you apply the paint is to purchasing a spray adhesive. It will only need to dry for a few moments before the acetate becomes tacky and a good bond.

Grab a paper plate or something that will suffice for a palette and apply some paint to your stencil brush. Small rhythmic pounces in an up and down motion are better than a sweep. If you are using a fairly large stencil with multiple colors, complete the first color completely before beginning the second. Within moments, the entire atmosphere of your room will be transformed.

There are many advantages to découpage and stencil decorating. Not only do they enhance and complement any room in your home but are affordable and can be completed in a small amount of time. The onset of fall is as good a reason as any to spruce up your decorating scheme, whether that involves making a few simple changes to reflect the season, or re-evaluating your entire interior design. No hobby will bring as many hours of pleasure or more compliments on your finished work as the old-time arts of découpage and stencil decorating.

Over A Century Of Innovation

For the past century, the Bielecky family has set the standard for handcrafting the finest quality rattan, cane and wicker furniture in America. In 1903, Andrew and Conrad Bielecky emigrated from Poland to New York and set up a small shop, weaving wicker chairs. In the 1920s Bielecky Brothers was one of the first to align with the emerging interior design profession, creating an eclectic variety of custom made furniture for individual decorators.

During the 1930s and 1940s when wicker was relegated to the back porch, the company survived by maintaining quality in production and finishing. At the "American Home Decorating Show" in 1951, the Bielecky exhibit attracted numerous designers including Billy Baldwin, who created an elegant collection of "wrapped cane" furniture for the company. In 1979, Angelo Donghia discovered the pliability of Bielecky Furniture Designs, - functionally as well as physically. At the time, Mr. Donghia found he could adapt and restyle these designs for Ralph Lauren's new home, creating a new line of rattan furniture for Bielecky.

At their factory in Queens, New York, Bielecky Brothers employ an international group of highly skilled artisans who handcraft each piece of furniture from start to finish using only the highest grade of raw materials. This meticulous procedure ensures both comfort and longevity in producing the most superior quality products in its field. It's no surprise that Bielecky furniture is appreciated by today's top designers and displayed in prestigious homes around the world.

The uniqueness of Bielecky Brothers lies in their understanding of the properties of wicker, cane and rattan. These reed, skin and vine materials have characteristics that inspire the design of the furniture, evoking the natural environment while being surprisingly comfortable. For example, wicker is, in actuality, not a material but a process. It is the art of weaving with reed, willow or sea grass. At Bielecky wicker is woven of reed—thin poles of rattan, extracted from a solid section of the vine. As this reed is composed entirely of material from the core of the plant, it is porous, absorbing stain, giving it a rich texture. This reed can be wrapped around a rattan frame for a bold sculptural effect. Furniture can be made entirely out of wicker, but designers have also incorporated wicker into fabric and leather based furniture. Wicker, then, inspires intriguing designs and new furniture conceptions among sculptors and designers.

The Bielecky exhibit that inspired designers to develop "wrapped cane" furniture created a new market. Cane is the skin of the rattan plant, which is peeled off to be used for wrapping and winding over hardwood or solid rattan frames. It can also be woven for seats or surface texture. It is relatively non-porous, and always retains its naturally mottled surface. The solid, firm, smooth surfaces created by cane make ideal desks, computer stations and tables for work rooms at home, or casual furniture for summer places.

Rattan can be restyled in many ways, allowing the pursuit of new design concepts or the enhancement of styles currently in fashion. The rattan plant is a vine which grows in Indonesia. It has a solid core, ensuring the poles are strong enough to be used for framing tables, chairs and sofas. When heated and steamed, the poles become flexible enough to bend, forming graceful furniture shapes. The skin may be left on, showing its characteristic "marbled" coloring and growing nodes. If the poles are peeled and sanded, the surface becomes pale and porous, suitable for staining and painting.

Perhaps now, through Bielecky's exploration and development of all the characteristics of wicker brings into focus why this company is a significant resource. Any type of furniture can be made: bench, bar, sofa, ottoman, chair, table, workstation, traditional and contemporary and outdoor furniture.

About a year ago, Bielecky was attracted to a very special custom furniture company with generations of old world tradition. The 40-year-old company, R. Gasparre, is preeminent in antique restoration, custom furniture, refinishing, repair and servicing.

The union of these two companies created Bielecky/R. Gasparre. This new association offers the interior design community 140 years of combined expertise in the custom development of fine furniture for home and office and unparalleled repair and restoration services. Bielecky continues to be innovative after a century of leadership in wicker furniture.

Nothing Wrong With A Little Rumpus

If you are prepared for the current hurricane season, then it is quite likely you have a room designated as your safe haven that remains filled with all of the supplies and comfort to hunker down when need be. If you are prepared for another typical off-season in the Hamptons, then it is also quite likely you have a room that is a go-to spot of safety from autumn and winter boredom. Call it a rumpus room, a playroom, a game room, or whatever you want to call it, this location may not be as vital to your survival when compared to a hurricane shelter, but it certainly can contribute to a calm spirit.

While volleyball nets, croquet wickets and makeshift baseball diamonds are being dismantled and removed from the backyard, it is time to set up shop indoors for your ultimate fantasy game room, which will keep you occupied as the temperatures drop. Depending on your time, budget and space, all game rooms will vary. However, when gathering the preliminary plans, keep the three Ls in mind: leisure, location and layout.

How you choose to kick back and relax and what your game of choice is should influence your earliest steps in creating your rumpus room. Many popular choices include table tennis, foosball, air hockey, pool (bumper-style or traditional) or even a pinball machine. Depending on how passionate you are about playing, you can still get quite the workout playing at one of such tables.

If you are not the active type, then favor the more interactive options. Make sure you have a clear television screen (LCD, plasma or not) with some high quality speakers to engage you and your company during a movie or the big game. For the best sound quality, keep the speakers six inches away from any wall. For the best deals, check out P.C Richards in Southampton or visit Best Buy on the North Fork.

A rumpus room staple, for sure, is a fine poker table for a round of Texas Hold 'Em, or even a round of drinks for that matter. If you are going to have drinks, then make sure your room has some type of bar and refrigerator set-up. You must not allow your guests, or even yourself, to go hungry or thirsty when there is important indoor leisure taking place.

The location you choose for the leisure room is important; where you create your game room should be influenced by noise and views. The most ideal spot is in a basement, above a garage, or any room in a building other than where you sleep. The idea is to have a nice barrier between the play area and the area you may want to keep quiet. You need a room that is not room-sensitive.

Now that you have a room and all of your toys with which to fill it, it is time to think of the best means of laying it all out. Think sound, think crowd, think space. An average area of three feet is best for separating one game or table from another. Of course, if you do not have a palace a two-foot space will do. Even one foot will suffice if things get desperate. Separate the television viewing area from the game area with cinema-style rows of couches or a nice semi-circle of furniture. Keep the food and drink supply in an area that is separated from the game and viewing stations, preferably free from company traffic as well.

Your rumpus room will be filled with fun things to do, so make sure there are fun things to look at as well. Vintage advertisements, movie posters, neon signs, and silly statues add character. Allow the play items in the room to influence the décor.

You can save the fine cuisine art, the watercolor portrait, and the family photos for other rooms of the house (they will be much safer there anyway).

Once all of the accommodations are finished and tailored to your liking, it is time to play. Be it for a social gathering, your child's play date, or some quality family time in the home, a rumpus room is practically a necessity. The temperatures may have not reached below 60 degrees just yet, but there is no reason to stall. Get the game room set up now so that, when the storms of boredom of the off-season arrive, you are perfectly prepared.

Grandma's Garden

My editors tell me that it is time for my annual report on my vegetable garden, that mysterious, bewildering, and enchanting patch of greenery that never ceases to amaze. This year has been no different. So here's the wrap-up.

For starters, the garden got planted very late this year. My rototiller backed out at the last minute, then I was out of town, then I had to find another worker to do the tilling, so nothing got planted until late June. Then, of course, it rained like mad for days, and that seems to have had an adverse effect on some of the crop, as did the blistering heat we had in late July. Despite all of that, the vegetables began their journey to fruition.

As usual, I planted zucchini—two nice seedlings from Agway. On the nursery shelf next to them were two eggplant seedlings, and I thought that they might be a nice addition. I bought tomatoes at the Horticultural Alliance of the Hamptons Garden Fair in May and babied them along until I could get them in the ground. From seed, string beans are always a sure thing, and this year, I tried lima beans again. I planted cucumbers, of course, squash, and pumpkins, Jack-be-Littles for my grandson Jack, and Big Max for his older brother.

And once again, the garden took off on its own, with me watching confused and sometimes dismayed. First, the cucumbers, which as I recall had always done nicely in their neat rows, were suddenly shooting vines all over the nasturtiums and into the tomatoes. Could I have planted a different variety? Must have — the tendrils were everywhere. The cukes were there, dozens of them, none of which I could find under the lush leaves but which my grandkids pulled out in abundance. Most people look puzzled when I tell this story, as though cucumbers ALWAYS grow on vines; however, I insist that mine have never done this before.

The tomatoes look wonderful, fat and happy — and green. And still green. And only just now are they beginning to turn a bit red, so I know that they are not another strange variety like the cucumbers. However, I fear they will freeze before they ripen.

I put the limas in with the string beans, where they did fine. There are only a few limas, but since I finally found one farm stand that sells them, I am well stocked for this year. The string beans satisfy any amateur farmer's heart, and, as usual, they are abundant, tasty, and fun for the grandkids to pick and eat, dirt and all — hasn't hurt them so far.

The first eggplant I found was so beautiful that I took it to a friend's house as a hostess gift; she is a great cook and I knew she would do it justice. On the other plant, lo and behold, the eggplants were WHITE, something I did not could happen, but clearly these were not going to turn purple and so I learned something new (something I should have known long before now, it's true — I also should have learned to read the labels on seedlings more carefully). They, and another purple one, decorated a table at a lecture I attended and were taken home by another good cook to meet their happy fate, I am sure.

The biggest surprise was the zucchini. I have two lovely, healthy, bushy plants, replete with those gorgeous deep golden flowers, which have produced one zucchini so far. ONE!! Who ever heard of harvesting ONE zucchini? Usually I am giving them away to anyone who looks the least bit interested, madly baking zucchini bread to use for months to come, and making a mental note to cut back next year; This year— one zucchini. So, we created Zelda Zucchini, with corn silk hair, string bean arms, lima bean eyes and a shawl of corn husks (see photo). Instead of bread, I made zucchini brownies; and they were terrific, moist, light and delicious. Someone actually asked for my recipe, and believe me, that does not happen to me very often (see below).

So far, the squash and pumpkins look right on track, so I am hoping for good results there. And I am making notes for next year: plant early, water well (I have still not found anyone interested in putting in an irrigation system for me), try more lima beans, pay more attention to varieties and plant labels, and hope that the eleven grandkids, four of whom will be in college next year and the youngest of whom will be nearly nine, will still say that Nana's garden is fun to watch and harvest, if only to humor their old granny.

Zucchini Brownies

DVDs To Get You Through

The fall goes by incredibly quickly and then, before you know it, the winter is here. For obvious reasons, you don't want to end up in a home without a decent DVD collection this winter. Now is a great time to beef up your collection in preparation for a night where you and your family plop down in front of the couch with a cup of hot cocoa for the age-old tradition of watching movies on a winter's evening. By then, the evenings will be starting at five o'clock, so you may need more than one movie to watch the night away. If you don't have the courage to order Netflix movies from your computer you are going to need to have a big handful of films to carry you through those cold winter nights.

We here at Dan's Papers understand what it means to plan ahead. And so, for your convenience and enjoyment we have compiled a list of fifteen must-get additions to your DVD collection this winter. Some you may already have and others may make you go, "Oh yeah, I really wanted to get that movie." Here they are.

Arrested Development Boxed Set DVD:

This is a show that many people have grown attached to and it's absolutely hilarious. You can get all three seasons in a boxed set that will have you falling out of your chair laughing as you watch another real estate deal go bad or another relationship ruined by Job the magician. Anybody that watches this show likes it.

The Godfather and Star Wars, all of them:

We know that you probably already have these in your collection. But if you don't have them, get out and get them. No collection is complete without them.

"24" Boxed Set

At work you've been hearing about all of these wonderful episodes that you have been missing. When you went to watch an episode, you had no idea what the heck was going on because the show is always a continuation of a previous show. Well, now is your chance to catch up on Jack Bauer so that this season, you won't be so confused.

Talladega Nights: The Ballad Of Ricky Bobby

Will Ferrell is a genius, and even though you meant to go see this movie, you never did because you were too busy this summer and didn't have time. Well shame on you. When this DVD comes out, jump on it faster then you can say Old School.

Nacho Libre

Here is another movie that you meant to see but didn't. Now it's on DVD and needs to be in your comedy collection right next to Napoleon Dynamite even though it is not the same caliber of genius.

Fight Club

So outrageously good that if you don't have this in your winter collection you should consider leaving the country. Amazing film. Simply amazing. Brad Pitt kicks some serious butt.

Terminator 2: Judgement Day

You may have seen this a thousand times, but it has been a while, hasn't it? You should see this movie again and then walk around like you are a terminator in the snow.

Ethan (continued from page 71)

"Our style studio locations have a real 'boutique-like' feel," explains Kaelin. "They're more like intimate, design centers than a traditional furniture store. Our style studios have all the design tools necessary, from fabrics and wallpaper to personalized design service. It's definitely a unique shopping experience."

If you're still unsure about where to start, take advantage of the free design service that many retailers, including Ethan Allen, offer. Visit the Ethan Allen Style Studio at 1054 Montauk Highway in Water Mill.

Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels

Just look at the name of this movie. It's awesome.

"Seinfeld," "The Sopranos," "Entourage" DVD Boxed Sets

All of these shows can be described as monumental. Even though you can only get season one of "Entourage" it's still worth getting. The show is a breakthrough for HBO.

The March Of The Penguins

Don't ask me why, but watching this film is really interesting. Penguins in general are interesting animals.

Hustle And Flow

This film won all kinds of awards and is a great flick, yet not a lot of people I know have seen it. It makes a great addition to the collection and comes in handy when you don't know what to watch.

Serenity

This is a great action flick that came out last year and didn't get enough credit. It's a roller-coaster from start to finish and is up there with The Fifth Element if you ask me.

Desk Is A Four-Letter Word

Desk is a four-letter word which is inherently connected to a more frightening four-letter word: work. The desk is designed specifically for work – people don't say, "Oh, I can't wait to get home, kick off my shoes and relax at my desk." Case in point: for this article I sat down at the partners' desk (a desk that can be used on both sides) I have in my house, only to spend the next 2 1/2 hours trying to figure out when it was made, where it was made, and who made it. I called my parents – they said "Jacobean Revival late 1800s, from England." I didn't believe them and got on the Internet to look around. I still don't know, but I stumbled upon a furniture maker by the name of R. J. Horner from New York City, who, in the late 1800s, made partners' desks in a similar fashion to the desk at which I was sitting. As I researched Horner, I saw other aspects of his work, including the rope carving around the desk top, in my oak desk. But it would require a lot more work to figure out if it is a Horner or even Horner-inspired. The truth is, whether it was R. J. Horner or Homer Simpson doesn't matter, unless I plan on selling it – which I don't.

For me, desks are anchors to a room. They carry the weight of an ominous chore. They are a constant reminder that work needs to get done. In that light, they are crucial to modern day living. The times of not taking your work home with you are over and have been for decades. So the desk, though I have a love-hate relationship (i.e. love the furniture and hate the implications), is a very important aspect of life, calling me away from my plush couch and reminding me that I have more productive tasks at hand.

Choosing a desk for your home can be difficult. Dropping a streamlined, glass and aluminum desk in a Victorian home really doesn't work, though some would argue that the opposite does. It depends on the desk and the space around it. For a modern style home, I'd look more toward the 1950s for a steel secretary desk or something by Milo Baughman. Both have their own charm and function. If you aren't in need of drawers, then a wonderful idea is a drafting table. Though not a desk by name, an antique drafting table, made of cast iron and beautifully grained wood, looks stunning in any style home. The oversized tabletop can also be switched to a vertical position and can be stored against a wall, out of the way, if you want to pretend you have no jobs looming, or if space is a consideration.

Part of my admiration for antique desks comes from knowing that others have used these desks before me. I'd never buy a brand new desk – especially from one of those big box stores. Particleboard and plastic veneer just don't have the same character as oak. But the history behind the desk, not necessarily who made it, but who sat at it and what they created while there, is fascinating. Pulling up a chair at Raymond Carver's desk or Frank Lloyd Wright's drafting table, though incredibly humbling, intimidating and possibly counter-productive, would be an amazing experience. Film furniture is another option, though I find it rather superficial. "They used this desk in Wall Street," just seems like hollow showmanship, but if Gordon Gekko is your role model, who am I to say? Far more interesting to me and far less rare are vintage desks from police stations. These pieces of furniture have seen more stories than any writer's desk or movie set.

As much as desks should have character, they also have to be functional, because after all, desks are designed for work. If you can't get your job done at a desk, the design has failed. Finding a desk of the right height, width, length, depth, work surface, and with the correct number of drawers all comes into play when searching for a practical piece of furniture.

Though we don't want to admit it and try to avoid it at every turn, we all work too damn hard out of the office. Hopefully the proper furniture will make your tasks feel a little lighter or inspire you to do great things. Then, when you've finished, you can kick off your shoes, put up your feet and relax on the couch. Until that time, if you're looking for a job, please sit down at your desk and find out who made mine.

—Christian McLean

With Marco Battistotti It's All About Proportions

Marco Battistotti was born in Milan, Italy where he studied Fashion Design at the prestigious Marangoni Fashion School. After completion, Marco's interests shifted toward architecture and interior design, inspired by the Old Italian Master Architects, such as Renzo Mongiardino and Alberto Pinto. In 1993, his aptitude for work brought him to New York City where he began his career as second in charge of one of the top 500 interior design firms in the world. His continuing education in classical architecture and his knowledge of mechanical constraints (learned when he worked for his father's engineering company in Italy) resulted in a series of extraordinary residences throughout the East Coast, Europe and the Middle East.

In 2002, Marco established his own firm in New York City and later in Bridgehampton. Although Marco's preference is classical architecture, he also designs streamlined contemporary and Zen interiors that generate what he calls the "wow effect."

Marco strongly believes in proportion as a starting point to achieve beauty and harmony in architecture and interior design. Major missteps in design can be easily avoided by following proportion canons that have been proven right for centuries. Giacomo Barozzi (b.1507; d.1573), often simply called Vignola, was one of the great Italian architects of 16th century Mannerism. The three architects who spread the Italian Renaissance style throughout Western Europe were Vignola, Serlio and Palladio. Vignola, who worked with Michelangelo, set the standard for proportions in Classical Architecture by applying a ratio based on a style. The Tuscan order is the more robust, while the Corinthian is the slimmest one. For example, the Tuscan order, inspired by a profile of a gentleman's face, has a ratio of 7:1, meaning that the total height of the column including base and capital should be seven times the diameter or vice versa, while the pedestal should be 2 1/3 times the diameter and the entablature (the portion above the capital) should be 1 3/4 times. Additional formulas have been established to determine the proportion of the capital and base.

The Roman Doric order (commonly referred to as the Doric order, but not to be confused with the Greek Doric order) was first introduced as early as the 7th century B.C.E. and has a ratio of 8:1, the pedestal should be 2 2/3 times and the entablature should be 2 times the diameter.

The Ionic order, originated by looking at the interior of a shell, has a ratio of 9:1; the pedestal should be 3 times and the entablature should be 2 times the diameter.

The Corinthian order, first drawn by watching a woven rattan basket surrounded by acanthus leaves and stalks growing around it, has a ratio of 10:1; the pedestal should be 3 1/3 times and the entablature should be 2 1/2 times the diameter of the column. This order maintains the same constraints as the Corinthian Composite that was conceived by adding Ionic scrolls on the four corners of the capital.

Similar canons should apply when dimensioning a door casing or a window casing. Such molding should not exceed 1/6 of the opening (example: on a 36" door, you should not exceed 6" casing). And again, when selecting a crown molding, you should follow the 1/15 ratio (10 foot ceiling = 8" crown molding). Those are just a few examples of parameters that should be applied during the design process.

Marco's philosophy is "We build better not bigger." He also emphasizes the importance of a furniture layout when designing your home as the furniture layout will determine the lighting and electrical plan. Art placement is also very important for those clients that own artwork.

The production of a rendering of the room, in addition to floor plans and elevations, is vital in order to capture the depth of the room and give the right picture to his clients during and after the presentation process. There are several tricks to make your rooms look grand. One of those is to maximize the height of the doors throughout the main floor as well as having a double height ceiling in the entrance hall. It is cru-

Sitting In Style

◀ The Hill House Chair

The Scottish architect Charles Rennie Mackintosh designed the Hill House Chair for the home of publisher W.W. Blackie in 1902. A decorative piece, the chair is meant to emphasize the space around it, much as a sculpture would, rather than provide a comfortable seat. The original chair remains on display at the Hill House in Hellenborough, England. Reproductions are available at shoptest.classicomobile.com/index.php/language/en.

▲ The Wassily Chair

The Wassily Chair was designed by Marcel Breuer for constructivist painter Wassily Kandinsky in 1925 while they were working together at the Bauhaus School in Dessau. Believed to be the first bent tubular steel chair design, it distills the traditional club chair to a series of strong, spare lines. The gleaming chrome-finished tubular steel frame – inspired by the graceful, curving handlebars of the his Adler bicycle – is seamless in its assemblage. Like many other chairs of the modernist movement, this design was mass produced in the 50s and 60s, and continues to be to this day. Visit www.dwr.com.

▲ The Bubble Chair

Created by Finnish designer Aero Aarnio in 1968, the Bubble Chair was designed to engulf the sitter in silence even in the most crowded rooms. These chairs, in both clear lucite and opaque plastic, were created in two styles, one that hung from the ceiling from a chain and the other that sat on top of a splayed pedestal. A reasonably-priced version of this design can be found at www.inmod.com.

The Barrel Chair ▶

Frank Lloyd Wright created this barrel-shaped chair in 1904 but the model evolved when he designed a chair for Herbert Johnson's "Wingspread" house in 1937. Highlighting the organic design is Wright's use of a solid cherry frame and tightly upholstered leather. Versions of this modernist staple can be found at steelform.com.

◀ Louis Ghost Armchair

Designed by Philippe Starck, the playful Louis Ghost Armchair (2002) is a postmodern triumph of technical innovation and historical style. Reinventing the classic Louis XVI armchair for Kartell, Stark translated the varied lines and formal geometry of its predecessor into a single robust form of opaque black injection-molded polycarbonate.

Heating Up In New York

Labor Day, for some a last chance opportunity to let loose and celebrate the summer, for others, a solemn reminder summer is over. Anxious thoughts arise as kids return to school and adults return to work and prepare mentally and physically for a potentially expensive, cold winter. For Santo Gentile, a Hampton Bays summer resident, preparing for the upcoming heating season meant being proactive. During this past summer Santo called New York Heating Corp., a Manhattan heating & cooling service company, and had his 30-year-old dinosaur of a gas boiler in the city replaced with a brand new one. "Not only is this new boiler about half the size of the old one, but I was informed the increase in efficiency could save me upwards of twenty percent a year in fuel bills," Santo said.

In Santo's quest for finding the right contractor he made a lot of phone calls and asked a lot of questions. To his credit he wanted a company that would do more than just install a boiler, but be there for him afterwards in case he needed future service or experienced any emergency problem. "I spend a lot of time out east in the off-season and am often away from the buildings for weeks on end; I needed the peace of mind knowing that I can call a service company that not only claims they give emergency service, but actually walks the walk. Listen, you can call anyone in to install a boiler, but I wanted a company that I can depend on for years to come and New York Heating Corp. came highly recommended."

In years past, service contracts for heating usually were associated with fuel oil companies exclusively. Most residential or small multiple dwelling gas heated building owners never really considered entering into a service contract to cover their equipment in the time of the emergency, and to maintain it throughout the year, but that trend has started to change over the years. "All it takes is that one time the building has no heat and you're scrambling on the telephone for service to make you realize.....it's peace of mind. No boiler of mine ever broke down on a Monday morning; it's almost always at night or on a weekend!"

A few helpful hints in finding a service company for your heating system; ask a lot of questions. Most companies claim they have a twenty-four-hour service, but question them, what is the average response time? What areas do they service? And how many technicians do they have? Often heating service heating companies have only one or two technicians and may try to cover all five boroughs or all of Nassau County. This can prevent you from receiving your service in a timely manner. Lastly, try to find a "soup to nuts" company that covers the full spectrum of heating services. Emergency service, installations, and even paperwork and violation issues should all be part of your thought process in making a decision. For Santo Gentile, New York Heating Corp. was a logical choice as they were specifically a Manhattan company that, along with installations, specialized in emergency service and maintenance and gave an average of a two-hour window for response time.

Another summer has come and gone and the first signs of autumn are quickly approaching, but for Santo Gentile one thing is certain; he can rest assured his building will run efficiently and effectively this upcoming winter.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

The 10-day period between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, which begins this Friday evening, is a time for prayer and introspection, and for the familiar aromas of traditional recipes. Growing up in a Sephardic Jewish household I think of the dishes we would prepare for the holiday. "For the New Year the table is full of everything that is growing," my mother would say. It is the beginning of the New Year on the solar calendar and the true beginning of the harvest.

Many dishes come to mind, such as spoonfuls of quince preserve, a beginning point to symbolize sweet abundance. The head of a whole roasted fish was reserved for the head of the house, as the word rosh in Hebrew means both head and a beginning. Pumpkin, an ancient symbol of fruitfulness and abundance, found its way into my mother's butter-nut squash fillo pie with honey, cinnamon and cloves for the holiday. Another seasonal dish that my family loves is her layered eggplant and tomato bake. The eggplant slices are coated in beaten egg whites to keep the vegetable from absorbing the oil as it fries – so said my mom. The tender, lightly-crisped eggplant is layered with fresh ripe tomatoes, basil, thyme and garlic for a truly delectable dish.

I took some liberties with the sugar plum cake which was developed years ago from a simple apricot cake. Italian plums are pitted and sugared, then placed in a cake batter and baked. The dessert is finished with an apricot glaze or a dusting of confectioner's sugar.

The fruits of the season are indeed a welcome symbol for a sweet year on any calendar.

LAYERED EGGPLANT AND TOMATOES

Before frying eggplant, coat the slices with beaten egg white. The technique prevents the eggplant from soaking up the oil.

Serves 6-8

- 2 medium eggplants, about 2 pounds
- 2 egg whites
- Vegetable oil for frying
- 3-4 large ripe tomatoes, sliced about 1/4 inch thick
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 1/4 cup chiffonade of fresh basil
- 1-2 teaspoons fresh thyme leaves
- 2-3 cloves garlic, sliced paper thin
- 2-3 tablespoons chicken stock

1. Rinse and dry eggplants. Cut off root end and rub the two cut surfaces together to draw off indigestible juices. (The technique eliminates salting the eggplant). Cut eggplants into 1/4-inch slices and set aside.

2. Beat egg whites in a bowl until frothy and set aside. Pour oil about one-inch deep in a deep fryer or iron skillet and heat to 375 degrees.

3. Dip eggplant slices, one at a time, into the beaten egg white, shaking off excess. Put several slices at a time into the hot oil and fry until golden brown on both sides; drain on paper towels. Continue until all slices are done.

4. Lightly oil a baking-serving dish and layer the eggplant with sliced tomatoes, salt and pepper, garlic slivers and herbs. Can be done ahead to this point. Refrigerate covered as necessary.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

5. Spoon chicken stock over the top layer (to moisten) just before baking. Bake in preheated oven for 15-20 minutes until hot. Cut into wedges for serving.

SUGAR PLUM CAKE

I can't resist baking this plum cake with the Italian plums currently in season
Serves 8

- 8-9 dark Italian plums
- 2-3 tablespoons sugar depending on sweetness of plums
- 6 tablespoons unsalted butter
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 2 eggs
- 1/3 cup flour
- 1/4 cup cornstarch
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
- Grated rind of 1 whole lemon
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- Glaze or confectioners sugar
- For the Glaze
- 3 tablespoons apricot jam
- 1 tablespoon orange liqueur or rum

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Generously butter an 8-inch round baking pan with removable bottom.

1. Rinse, halve, and pit plums then put plums into a mixing bowl. Sprinkle on sugar and toss gently to mix. Set aside.

2. Cut butter into small pieces and place in a mixing bowl or bowl of electric mixer with the paddle attachment. Cream the butter with sugar until light and fluffy. Add eggs, one at a time, and beat 2-3 minutes until smooth and thoroughly incorporated.

3. Sift flour, cornstarch, salt, and baking powder together and fold gently into egg mixture until thoroughly combined. Add grated rind and vanilla then stir to mix.

4. With the aid of a rubber spatula, spread batter (which will be fairly thick) into prepared pan. Place sugared plum halves cut-side down in one layer over surface of batter. Bake 25-30 minutes until top is golden brown and edges start to shrink from sides of pan or insert a cake tester into center of cake to test for doneness. Cool in pan for 5-10 minutes.

5. To remove cake from baking pan, loosen sides by drawing a kitchen knife between cake and sides of pan. Place a flat-top cylindrical object, such as a coffee can, on work surface and place the baking pan on top of the can to release sides of pan. Transfer cake to a serving dish and glaze top of cake (optional) or dust with confectioner's sugar.

To prepare glaze: Warm apricot jam in a small saucepan and stir until softened. Remove from heat and cool a bit. Add liqueur or rum and stir to mix. Spread warm mixture over top of cake to glaze. Serve warm or at room temperature with vanilla ice cream or frozen yogurt if desired.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

review: 300 stories of sag harbor...by jan silver

Stacy Dermont is a local playwright who specializes in historical theater. Her new play, 300 Stories of Sag Harbor, premiered at the historic Old Whalers Church as part of the Sag HarborFest celebration last weekend. In three related monologues delivered by three real "Spirit Guides" – two historical and one contemporary – the play covers three centuries of Sag Harbor people, places and events. This is truly living history.

Actor Christopher Linn, dressed as a 19th century store owner in full sleeves and vest with his long hair pulled back, portrays William Wallace Tooker (1848-1917) who owned the Sag Harbor Pharmacy. Linn was forceful and constant in his characterization of the man who had to work in the family business at a young age but still retained a sense of humor and developed self-taught expertise about Long Island's indigenous peoples (he abhorred their being called "Indians").

As the first "Spirit Guide" in the play, Tooker relates how Sag Harbor began as an Algonquin coastal village next to wetlands, or a slough as it was called then. The natives also called Long Beach Weequatuck ("the well at the end of the woods") and they made high-quality beads and wampum from local clam and whelk shells found there. The local tribe farmed, fished and went whaling.

The first settlers arrived in the early 1700s and built huts on Turkey Hill, a high point created by the glacier on the west side of the village. The first whaling ships and grist mill appeared in Sag Harbor in the 1760s and the village became a major East Coast port. Long Wharf was built in 1771 and Sag Harbor was a garrison for British troops during the Revolutionary War. Col. Jonathan Meigs' successful raid against the British took place in 1777, and is commemorated with a monument in the Old Burying Ground next to the Whalers Church.

Tooker then introduced the next "Spirit Guide," Annie Cooper Boyd (1864-1941). She is a high-spirit-

Brittany Brown, Christopher Linn and Bonnie Grice

ed, artistic, independent woman from a well-off family who made ships barrels ("coopers"). Brittany Brown is delightful as Annie Boyd, never quite losing the tomboyish nature of her childhood despite marrying the more somber city resident William Boyd. (Nancy Boyd Willey, Annie's recently-deceased daughter, bequeathed Annie's house to the Sag Harbor Historical Society which is now raising funds to restore it.)

Annie talks about the War of 1812 when the British threatened to burn down Sag Harbor. Four thousand new Americans poured in from across the Northeast to defend it and defeat the British. Many local families still had slaves at this time and New York State outlawed slavery in 1827. The heyday of the whaling industry was the 1840s when most of the large homes on Captain's Row (now Upper Main St.) were built. After the Civil War, the railroad from New York City was extended to Sag Harbor in 1870 and summer visitors began to arrive.

As the whaling industry declined, Sag Harbor went into an economic depression, which finally lifted when Joseph Fahys built the brick watchcase factory in 1881 and brought European immigrants in to staff it. Many factory workers were Jewish and they established Temple Mishkin (now called Adas Israel) around 1900, the oldest congregation in Suffolk County.

The final "Spirit Guide" for the 20th century is Bonnie Grice, the host of "In the Morning" on local NPR station WLIU and NPR's nationally-syndicated program "The Song Is You." The blond, energetic Ms. Grice adopted Sag Harbor as her home. She did a Q & A with the audience about recent Harbor history such as the biggest news story of 2006 – was it the removal of the big Hortonsphere gas ball or the over-estimated tax valuations of many old Sag Harbor homes which created a big tax revolt in Southampton Town?

Other 20th century history covered by Ms. Grice – John Jermain's granddaughter Mrs. Russell Sage gave the village the library, the Whaling Museum (her home), and Mashashimuet Park; the Ku Klux Klan was allowed to speak at the Old Whalers Church in 1923; the 1938 hurricane blew the steeple off the Old Whalers Church; local radio station WLNG starts up in 1963; Ted Conklin buys and restores the American Hotel in 1972; the Sag Harbor art deco movie sign is finally restored in 2005; and some celebrities become associated with Sag Harbor (John Steinbeck, Billy Joel, Julie Andrews) – but somehow the 1991 creation of Bay Street Theatre is omitted, and Jimmy Buffett, and E.L. Doctorow, and Patrick Malloy.....

Toni Munna directed 300 Stories with a steady pace, allowing the actors to season the historical facts with humorous touches. Ms. Munna and Ms. Dermont, through Dermont & Munna Entertainment, produce plays of social significance which can easily be performed at local venues. They are working on two new plays, Homofiles, about homophobia on Long Island, and The Many Lives of The Old Burying Ground, for 2007. In 2008, they plan to produce Healers, a drama based on the lives of three local women. 300 Stories of Sag Harbor will be performed for Sag Harbor's tricentennial celebration next year.

review: urinetown at the gateway playhouse

Having preconceptions is not the best way to approach any performance, especially when you are due to review it. I freely admit that I was not really looking forward to seeing this production of Urinetown that closes a wonderful summer season at Gateway Playhouse in Bellport when it has its last show on October 7th. Rightly or wrongly, I find the title to be gratuitously "yucky" and seeming to promise that sophomoric, scatologically-based humor that seems to sell so many puerile film 'comedies' today.

In the event, the subject was not that bad. The opening numbers are fixated on urination and revolve around the way that during a period of great drought and subsequent water shortage, "big business" now charges people exorbitant amounts of money for the privilege of performing their necessary bodily functions. The rest of the show develops the theme of this struggle between big business and the "little people," led by one Bobby Strong, played with appropriate bravado by Timothy A. Fitz-Gerald. In the process he finds love with Hope Cladwell, the daughter of the Caldwell B. Cladwell (Broadway veteran Hal Davis), the CEO of the wicked company that controls the water supply. Christina DeCicco is pretty in an ingénue fashion and shows that she has a good voice. The problem is that there really is nothing in this show, music or acting wise, to enable the performers to display their undoubted talents. The full title of the show is Urinetown – The Musical but Mark Hollman, listed as the perpetrator of music and lyrics has really created Urinetown – The UnMusical. Rogers, Bernstein, Lorenz Hart and Hammerstein must be turning in their graves. But then, I'm unashamedly old fashioned when it comes to musicals, except for that wonderful Steven Sondheim – now there's someone who really knows how to pen a witty biting lyric as well as composing some memorable music.

Urinetown had a long run on and off Broadway and won several Tony awards. The official website describes it as a "neo-Brechtian absurdist melodrama" but to compare this to the work of Bertold Brecht is both totally absurd and melodramatic. The show works overly hard to try and parody the styles of shows as diverse as Les Miz, Sweeney Todd and Fiddler but sometimes the parodies are hard to decipher. It also sets out to be a "social satire" but satire implies humor and there were only a few good punchlines throughout the show.

One or two numbers, such as the gospel-styled "Run Freedom Run" have some life to them but such moments are fleeting. The use of a part-time narrator and an abandoned waif to explain to the audience what is going to happen really adds nothing of value to the production. The costumes and stage setting are predictably drab and miserable and there is nothing uplifting about either. The cast all work very hard and perform their roles very well but they have so little to work with.

Reading the program notes, there is the comment that the authors of the show considered musicals a "cheesy dated art form and they challenged themselves to think of the worst concept for a show they could imagine – something like 'Springtime for Hitler' from The Producers would have been." In this respect they deserve full marks, for this is certainly what they delivered! Another label attached to this show is "The little show that could;" for me it was "The little show that didn't."

This is a show that will not be everyone's cup of tea (an unfortunate analogy perhaps). I accept that many people will spend the evening laughing, as a proportion of this audience did and you certainly have to give full credit to the Gateway management for taking a chance with Urinetown and for being prepared to take risks.

Looking back, this has been a great summer season of very diverse shows at Gateway. With all of them, with the exception of this show, I have been at times enthralled, entertained, saddened and happy and I have always come away reveling in their very high professional quality of casting and production that fully rivals Broadway. The next Gateway show will be their very new production of the spectacular A Christmas Carol. This is the show, originally produced by Radio City Entertainment, which so many people have enjoyed in recent years at the Theater at Madison Square Garden. This Christmas spectacular will run from December 15th until the 30th at the Patchogue Theater.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood 1n The Hamptons

On a Los Angeles hillside, the nine huge placards spelling out Hollywood, originally read Hollywoodland. The sign was the cheesy ploy of an enterprising real estate developer selling homes in what might have been the first theme park – a la-la-land – America where happiness was undeniable. Plenty of sunshine, oranges and opportunity. Hollywoodland is back now as the ironic title of a film picturing the failure, dissolution and violent death of George Reeves, the first actor to portray Superman on film. The excellently executed Hollywoodland was first titled Truth, Justice and the American Way, but Superman Returns was in completion and its franchise owner, Warner's, legally barred it. They later dropped "and the American Way" perhaps realizing that the George Reeves' story massively reminds us that the phrase has a hollow ring about it. Golly! The Man of Steel dead of a speeding bullet splattering his brains against a bedroom wall! A suicide, or –?

B movie caliber actor Reeves would be the last to believe he could be the subject of a thoughtfully provocative movie that resurrects him from ignominy. Overall, Hollywoodland treats Reeves with sympathetic affection – more as a symbol of the industry's cut and dried ability to discard the remnants of retooling. Among other stories, the film tells of the blunderbuss effect television had on Hollywood. Reeves was not the only one foundering as the late 40s had the movie business unreeling out of control. He was heavier than the fellow tapped by David O. Selznick in 1938 to be one of Scarlett O'Hara's suitors. Even then, he loses out to a really nerdy little squirt with squiggly yellow hair. Reeves might have dreamt he'd be another Gable. He had good height, dark oily hair and a boyish but somewhat prize-fighter face. He had youthful hopes of being one, though his hopes were dashed by his protective mother, Helen Bessolo, well-acted by Lois Smith. The few juicy films he did in 41 to 43 were dried up following his WW II service and like his fighting career, his movie career sank despite endless auditions and endless nights niteclubbing (another form of audition). Finally in 1951, two important events occurred, both of which were, in a way, damning: He met a somewhat older woman offering him a hot affair and he got the leading role in the grade Z movie, Superman vs. the Mole Men.

George Reeves' encounter with the Mole Men was moderately successful. It led to the TV Superman series that became terribly popular. Gee, think of what it was up against – wrestling, ancient westerns and Howdy Doody! Although he was a plumpy - lumpy Superman, it was a success. On the really downside, he was typecast for life. How about his torrid romance? It was risky hot. She was Toni Mannix, more mature and had a lot of money and influence because she was married to the tough Eddie Mannix, an important executive at MGM who had muscle to spare – he wasn't called "Mr. Fix-it" for nothing.

Those were rough times for the major studios; even Louis B. Mayer wouldn't be able to weather them. Obviously, a guy like Eddie had mob connections and they were, helpful. Here's the nitty gritty. Much of Hollywoodland owes its intensity to the actors. As good as Lois Smith is as George's mother, Diane Lane as Toni is fabulous, and Bob Hoskins as Eddie leaps over tall buildings, but it is Ben Affleck as George Reeves that is truly super. Given only third billing, he none-the-less gives a star-plus performance. Of course, a detractor colleague of mine cattily remarked, "Well, it's perfect typecasting. An actor who has become a joke is not a difficult role for Affleck to do." I don't entirely agree. Besides putting on pounds for the part, more so, Affleck put on tremendous weight to his inner self. Sounds serious? Yes, Ben Affleck reaches identity crisis heaviness that is quite remarkable. It is the same with Reeves' acting ability. I've just rescreened 1943's So Proudly We Hailed, a war movie about nurses in the first days of the war. As older Claudette Colbert's lover, he does just fine. Eeerily, the nurses calm the war orphan children with numerous Superman stories. Was there something "extra" about Reeves?

Sad to relay, the marvelous actor Adrien Brody, given lead billing and is another thread to the story, plays second fiddle as a private eye hired to solve the death of Superman. Did Toni and Eddie do him in after he took up with the young starlet, Lenore, done by attractive, but equally suspect, actress Robin Tunney?

George Reeves has become a minor legend. Minor or major actor has no meaning. It's the system we're talkin' about. Brr–rr–rr.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals. Sarah Halsey assists him.

MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

Jackass Number 2

It's been a while since Johnny Knoxville, Steve-O and Wee Man have been on our screens indulging their masochism and perhaps it hasn't been long enough. There's plenty of wince-inducing violence here and some genuinely funny (if obviously excruciating) physical comedy but the sense of excitement seems to have gone out of this circus of pain.

Flyboys

Tony Bill is a director most recently famous for working on episodes of "Monk" and the long-dead "Felicity." How he came up with the money to float this wretched tale of American soldiers fighting for the French in World War I is anyone's guess then. James Franco (Harry in the current Spiderman franchise) leads a dreary cast through the necessary clichés of commercial war cinema.

Jet Li's Fearless

Allegedly the master's last martial arts film, Jet Li is going out on a high with this biopic of Chinese master Huo Yuanjia. As ever with such fare, much of the excitement comes from a visceral thrill of violence, but there is a real beauty in just watching Li move. A brutal kind of ballet.

All The King's Men

This remake of the 1949 classic seems to come at a perfect time: New Orleans is in the spotlight and the world itself is visibly in the clutches of debased, power-gorged politicians. That said, this is lifeless stuff lacking the verve of the Robert Rossen classic or Robert Penn Warren's original text. A strong cast (Sean Penn, Patricia Clarkson, Anthony Hopkins) seem to be hungry for more to get their teeth into than director Steven Zaillian will provide.

Gridiron Gang

I have a dream that one day all the children of the world will be given the love and care and financial assistance that will keep them from being either "down and out" or from "the wrong side of the tracks." Alas, in the meantime, Hollywood will continue to produce films such as this in which The Rock teaches a rag-tag bunch of kids that football can save them. Ugh.

The Black Dahlia

Who better to direct a film about the real-life sensational murder of starlet Kay Lake than the master of stylishly enmeshed sex and violence, Brian De Palma? Adapted from James Ellroy's novel, this is a classy affair all round, excellently acted by Scarlett Johansson as Lake and Josh Hartnett as the police officer involved.

Everyone's Hero

Seemingly CGI really is here to stay and, even after Labor Day, they just keep coming. This is particularly unexciting, following the exploits of a talking baseball and bat (voiced by a misguided Whoopi Goldberg) that assist a child on his way to help the Yankees win the World Series. As a curio, the late Christopher Reeve co-directed.

The Last Kiss

The sometimes-charming, sometimes-wretched Zach Braff stars in this remake of the 2001 Italian film of the same name. Braff's Michael is a man on the verge of maturity with a pregnant girlfriend (Jacinda Barrett) and a schoolgirl affair (Rachel Bilson). Don't let the Paul Haggis screenplay credit put you off though, this is lovely fare played well by a strong cast.

Hollywoodland

Director Allen Coulter, who has a strong history in TV ("Six Feet Under," "The Sopranos," etc.) takes to the big-screen with a splash for this fictionalized account of the questionable suicide of the first screen Superman, George Reeves. Ben Affleck plays Reeves and shows unexpected skill with Diane Lane, Bob Hoskins and Adrien Brody also in superb form.

The Covenant

Proudly proclaiming itself "from the producers of Underworld," this film at least seems to know its place. Here, four teenage boys with magical powers must control a centuries-old curse. Director Renny Harlin is no stranger to catastrophic failure (Remember Geena Davis' death-knell, Cutthroat Island?) and this is luckily not that, if only because its sights are set so low.

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"MELANGE" AT GONE LOCAL GALLERY

The first thing we notice about the current show at Amagansett's Gone Local Gallery is the appropriateness of the title: "Melange," meaning mixture or medley. There's an effective combination of media (oil, pastels, encaustic, acrylic and metal), plus diverse styles (from abstraction and Expressionism to even a bit of Surrealism).

Oil abstractions represent a directional change for Pam Focarino, whose beachscapes were distinctive for their subject matter and painterly, expressionistic technique. Her new skyscapes are less definable and realistic, but there still remains a mysterious quality that evokes a strong mood like her past works.

This time, we can imagine episodes of catastrophic proportions happening in the sky. An explosion perhaps? Or is it an implosion? The end of the world? Or the creation of the world? What's intriguing besides the bursts of colors is their various positions on the canvas from lower right to upper right. Somehow, Ms.

Focarino's works recall those by Cynthia Knox, an observation that's a compliment to both artists.

Pieces by Fulvio Massi feature geometric abstraction which reminds us a little of another artist as well, this time David Salle's collages. Such a similarity is predicated on the relationship between objects of Pop culture and a narrative thrust.

Martha Stotzky's encaustic works on wood employ a combination of elements as well, this time mixing abstraction with an objective focus. Her houses are primitive-like, with their vigorous reds and blues, yet they are also somehow refreshingly authentic.

Marilyn Church's gestural figures are always a pleasure to see, her females caught in a web of "Film Noir" expressionistic intrigue.

While these works are less realistic than her court

Work by Pam Focarino

scenes (for example, these figures lack facial features), Ms. Church's talent for suggestion still shines through. Her settings are ambiguous, yet the ambience signifies danger: alleyways and "behind the scenes" places are forever present in her paintings.

Ms. Church's females are likewise ambiguous. Are they the objects of a stalking menace as well? Or could they be the subjects of the story that the artist suggests, an instigator of violence instead? There's no ambiguity involved with Abby Abrams' sculpture when we consider "Help," her overtly surreal man/turtle piece. It's to the point and laughable, yet we recognize only too well the plight of a fellow human being.

"Melange" will be on view at Gone Local until September 28. Call 631-267-5315 for information.

HONORING THE ARTIST: DIANE DRESCHER

It's delightful to finally find an artist (or anyone for that matter) who remains steadfast in their dislike of e-mail. But cover artist Diane Drescher is one such person. Ms. Drescher doesn't necessarily go along with the crowd concerning other matters either. She's not only a free thinker, but an articulate advocate for what art should mean in today's world of commercialism. The following conversation proves the point.

Q: You know from everyday life that being an artist and making art is not always understood by people. From the get-go, you know you are different, perhaps not a part of the mainstream. What questions do people ask; what answers do you give?

A: People's eyes glaze over when I say I'm an artist. Then they may ask me where my work is. What gallery? What size is my work? If I'm not in a gallery, I can tell them about where my work used to be.

Q: How would you explain what an artist is, how you do what you do, in case anyone asks?

A: Art is not a science; it's very subjective. Art doesn't have a resume, starting out and ending up somewhere. Being an artist - it's an odd thing. What I do is more a process, not making an object. I click into process, imagination, a certain energy level.

Q: What factors are important to you about being an artist?

A: Being a part of an art community. There's an understanding of who you are. When I had a studio in Union Square, working in the neighborhood where Willem de Kooning and Gorky used to have their studios, I felt good vibes. It gave me great comfort. You'd run into other artists in the elevator, talk about art. You don't feel isolated.

Q: You work now in upstate New York, right?

A: Yes, since 2001 I've been spending time in Woodstock. It's the same comfort feeling; I go to the store to buy bread, drink coffee, talk to other artists.

Q: Your cover this week is a scene from here, not Woodstock, however.

A: Yes, it's a sailboat at Northwest Landing by Sag Harbor.

Q: Although you mentioned that its style is moving toward abstraction, you also make a point of stressing your traditional training in art.

A: My training was in the basics of art, the foundations, especially when it came to the figure. I feel strongly about the importance of this kind of training. I studied at The Art Students League and The Art Institute of Chicago.

I also have an appreciation of art history; I wanted to plug into that lineage, to find out what traditional art was. A lot of art that's been done the last 20-30 years may not stand the test of time.

Q: What artists, then, do you think will last? What artists have you particularly learned from?

A: Cezanne, his use of color, and more contemporary artists like Milton Avery, his shapes and forms. Also Rothko.

Q: I'm assuming you don't care for conceptual art.

A: With a lot of conceptual art, all you have is the product which is secondary to the process. But I've liked some conceptual art.

Q: I know you had an earlier profession in the fashion business, where you were trained in art and design. How did that experience as a design consultant influence your painting?

A: It took me to Paris and London, and I got a chance to see wonderful museums when I wasn't too busy.

Q: I have the feeling that your ideas about art haven't changed through the years, however.

A: Yes. Your work becomes a diary, a record. When you no longer have your art (perhaps it's been sold) it becomes a hunk of your life. But I'm not attached to my work. I'm going to keep doing my art for the rest of my life. You're born with it (the desire to paint). You can't help yourself.

Fall Fashion

Its Fashion Week and so it only seemed apt that I should sit down with my favorite fashion guru and style consultant, Pamela Bouchard, of The Dressing Room. Bouchard styles people with looks from Bergdorf's to budget, and can also be known to hot foot it to the Hamptons for any fashion emergency. So who better to get the low down on what's up?

"This is a season where fashion is a little more pared down," says Bouchard, "It's not the highly embellished garments of last season, but more about layering in the right proportions. In fact, layers are almost used like accessories and dressing is about proportion and volume." I asked what she meant by this. The answer.....volume on jackets, blouses and sweaters and skirts. For example, the blouse, a key piece this fall, might have volume on the sleeve, with fuller Edwardian details like lantern sleeves.

Another trend is that everything is dark and moody in feel and color, and what's more, unlike in other seasons where gray, or brown might be talked about as the new black, this year, black IS the new black! Any colors are blackened and brooding, almost medieval in cast with plenty of gray and chocolate brown. Reds and violets are accent, but again, broodingly dark.

There's a distinctive 80s feel with the shocking comeback of the legging. But a sleeker, more architectural and sophisticated 80s. So not leggings that are printed and brightly colored that we all remember. These are more chic, darker and tight to the leg, used as a layering piece, whether under a cinched waist tulip skirt or a chunky sweater dress.

A pretty top is a key item. But only a blouse, and it will take the form of frilly and flirty, contrasting the darkness of the rest of the season's somber mood. Blouses are high neck, bowed, ruffled and jabot.

Skirts add volume and come in several forms, the first being the bubble, or tulip skirt, then, in the right proportion, either leggings or opaque tights can be used as layering pieces. Beware, however, bubble skirts feature your legs.....so make sure you have good pins when thinking about shopping for one. If not for you, the 40s / 50s inspired pencil skirt is back again and shown layered with leggings. A chunky sweater dress is also going to be big this season and is a key item. Micro minis are in.....though not in great quantity and AGAIN always worn with leggings and layers. Whether sweater dressing in general, from chunky gauges to fine layers, mixing in different proportions is key. For example, put a long fine gauge tunic, layered over a knit legging, with a chunkier gauge cable knit vest, or crop sweater.

Cropped boxy jackets, with mild trapeze shapes to them, very fitted, but then bellling out a little at the bottom are key, too. Vests are big, especially with fur trims and make great layering pieces.

We've all seen the new Gap ad, featuring the stunning Audrey Hepburn .....well, it's their take on that 50s/60s dressing and the leggings I keep harping on. Skinny pants can also act as layering pieces and a different take on leg covering. And since I do keep mentioning these darn leggings as underpinnings, some excellent brands to try are: Vince, Anna Sui, Falke, Wolford, or at a lower price point, Hue.

Trench style jackets are the way to go for outer layers, but the new influence this season that we haven't seen for a very long time is the cape.

Opaque tights are also a staple and making a huge comeback.

Accessories are major, giving a punch to outfits that are a little more dour. Get a big bag and a wide belt to cinch you in at the waist. Shoes, from chunky wedges and platforms that make a statement are heaven, but coming down to earth, ballet flats or flat high boots are also key. An opaque leg, melding into a sculptural platform shoe is the look du jour. Jewelry, from rings to big cuffs, needs to be chunky so as not to get lost in all the layers of the season.

A peripheral trend is the sleek menswear inspired look, and military detailing is also something we're noticing this season. Fur trim, animal prints and skin prints are here again. But aren't they always?

Contrasting is another way to dress this year, e.g. a snow-white swing coat juxtaposed with black leggings and black chunky shoes.

So what are you waiting for? Get shopping!

THE Y FACTOR with Christian McLean

The Big Run

I'm not one to make New Year's Resolutions and I'm sure as hell not one to actually stick to them, but this past January, I made the declaration that I would run the Shelter Island 5K in or under 21 minutes. I joined a gym, bought new sneakers (with nifty shocks built into them) and hit the treadmill. It was terrible; the wheezing and sore legs were awful. After a couple of weeks, I was able to get things going and I was able to run three miles (but not in 21 minutes). It has been nine months since I had joined the gym, and at some point, I completely forgot why I had started running in the first place. I started slacking at the gym and making excuses to myself.

With the 5K only a month away, I have to get back on track and start training seriously. I know 3.1 miles in 21 minutes isn't lightning quick, but it isn't exactly slow. If I had kept my regimen up all winter, spring, and summer, 21 minutes would be a walk in the park, but with less than 30 days, I'm trying to figure out if pushing myself to reach that goal by intense training is worth it.

The Mayo Clinic has a 10-week running program to help train for a 5K, but I only have four weeks. So my training is going to have to be condensed and concentrated if I am going to get myself in gear for the run.

This is the plan. . . The first step for me is to take my car and drive the race route, noting mile intervals and finding markers; big oak tree - 1 mile, light blue house - 2 miles, and so on. The second step is to figure out a music selection. I know it sounds silly, but music can help control your tempo and to some extent your heart rate: too fast and you'll burn yourself out, too slow and you'll never make it past mile 1. The third step is to run the race route timed with the running soundtrack. Running on treadmills is great, but your mile/minute results change once you're on the pavement, especially when there are hills involved and on Shelter Island, there are always hills involved.

Gauging from the run, I will figure out how much, often and hard I am going to have to train. If I pull in at 22 minutes, then it's just a matter of running two to three times a week with no real change in routine or pace. The repetition should be enough to get everything in proper working order and shave a minute off my time. If I'm over by more than a couple of minutes, it's time to turn up the heat. Running three days a week (every other day) may still be enough, but the workouts are going to have to vary. Two days a week I should be pushing myself, trying to make the 21-minute time and the third day will be for distance. I'll run slower, but for four or five miles. The distance will burn more calories, plus train my body and mind to deal with 40 minutes of running, which, among other things will trick my brain into thinking that 3.1 miles isn't that big of a deal.

Changing my diet will also help. If I pass on the mac and cheese and opt for something healthier (lower calories, full of protein and vitamins), I can drop a few pounds from the waist and hopefully build a little more muscle in my legs.

Also important, very important actually, is stretching. I had a coach in high school that thought that stretching was a bunch of mumbo jumbo and a waste of time. But the truth is that stretching can make a world of difference. Start off with a nice walk or even a very light jog (5-8 minutes) to get the blood pumping and the muscles active, then stretch.

Make sure you are getting a good 30-second stretch per muscle. Some areas will need more stretching than others, and sometimes one leg is tighter than the other. It is essential to have each leg equally flexible. Then, after your run, stretch again.

With a month left, 21 minutes isn't impossible, all it's gonna take is hard work and time.

If you'd like to give me a run for my money, the Shelter Island 5K will take place on October 21st. For more information call 631-749-0479.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

The East End market is certainly filled with its share of extraordinary estates and most of them have that familiar Hamptons stamp on them. What this means is the way in which they are built and decorated are truly distinctive to this area. It is what has come to be known as "Hamptons Style." One could be practically anywhere else in the country and when some one is speaking about a Hamptons style home, a certain look will immediately come to mind. Cedar shingles, white columns, long private clamshell drives and open-ocean views. Many of these estates have spread outdoors by offering covered porches or pergolas that are decorated just as beautifully and are just as equipped as any room indoors, with features such as seating galleries, fire pits, bars, outdoor fireplaces, overhead lighting and fans and outdoor drapes that blow in the ocean breeze. All-white rooms with walls of French doors have also become a trademark look here. A typical Hamptons-style home would be much like the beach house featured in the movie Something's Gotta Give. All the above-mentioned features in these homes are meant to get every bit of enjoyment and elongate the summer season. They are also ways of having the shore closer all year long.

In Southampton, "Old Trees" is one such estate now on the market. It was built in 1911 and was designed by Goodhue Livingston. It is set on more than 10 acres bordering Lake Agawam in Southampton. The estate is completely enclosed by trees and is set far back from the road making for ultimate privacy. It has more than 400 feet of lake frontage and also has ocean views. The compound consists of a three-story main house with 13 bedrooms and 9 baths. It also has a sizable pool cabana, as well as staff quarters over the three-car garage. There is a pool, a tennis court and a 3-bedroom guest cottage. The current owner has completely updated and restored the entire estate. The property is listed exclusively with Prudential Douglas Elliman in Southampton. One can take a virtual tour of the estate by going to www.oldtreesestate.com.

Another prime example of this style of estate can be found on Gin Lane in Southampton. This one is priced at $20 million and is not on, but is just steps to, the ocean beach in one of the most prestigious areas in the Hamptons. This five-acre traditional shingle Hamptons-style estate has six en-suite bedrooms, 9 baths, an observation tower, and a putting green. The 7500 square foot mansion is in impeccable condition. It is listed with The Corcoran Group in Bridgehampton.

Another quite well-known estate in the Montauk Moorlands is now for sale. Celebrity artist and photographer Peter Beard is now selling his unique six-acre oceanfront. The estate consists of five oceanfront cottages and is in one the most secluded areas on the entire East End. Because it is so private, many celebrities have found their way to the Moorlands, where sometimes a driveway could be as much as a mile long. This property is a classic example of one of the many high-end Montauk getaways in the Moorlands that are tucked securely away and are situated exceptionally close to the rugged cliff-side oceanfront where the water views are completely unobstructed. One of the buildings, a historic windmill, was moved there in the early 1970s from the highest point of Ditch Plains, Sandpiper Hill, an area more recently labeled Shadmoor. The windmill was saved from falling into the ocean, though the remains of the structure finally did years later. This estate is one of the most unique properties on the East End market today. The property is listed exclusively with Prudential Douglas Elliman at $20 Million.

REPRESENT

Dear Dan,

As a long time resident of Bridgehampton (28 years), a former member of the Board of the Hampton Classic and an admirer of your writing and community activism, I felt it important to have my say about Dan's Papers' photographic coverage of Grand Prix Sunday. I am a loyal reader of Dan's Papers. I have watched you do wonderful stories about our community and the things that make it special. I have smiled at your thoughtfulness and insight. Your support of all things Bridgehampton and all things children makes us all proud.

So, it was with sadness, that once again, I opened my Dan's, turned to the photographs of Grand Prix Sunday and did not see a hint of ethnic diversity of any kind. The Hampton Classic is the premiere event of the season. It is a showcase for our community unlike any other event. The Hampton

Classic and especially Grand Prix Sunday, draws many different kinds of spectators. It has always had a diverse group of supporters, exhibitors, attendees, table buyers and guests. That diversity was not reflected, nor is it ever, in Dan's. Why?

Bill Cunningham of the New York Times Sunday Styles Section was able to capture the look and feel of Grand Prix Sunday better than our own Dan's Papers. Bridgehampton has grown over the years to include a broad spectrum of individuals from all walks of life and ethnic backgrounds. I would hope that in the future Dan's Papers would be able to capture a more inclusive picture of our community.

In the spirit of constructive comment.

HORSE SENSE

Dear Dan,

I just read Christian McLean's article detailing the story of the woman rescuing horses in Sagaponack. At the end of his article Mr. McLean ponders why others are not doing the same.

Here on the North Fork Barbara Hubbard and her business partner Jen have been rescuing and rehabilitating horses for several years. For a better perspective on what they then do with the horses please see The News-Review (of Riverhead) from July 13, 2006. The story can be found on page 15.

Barbara is an amazing display of selflessness and stewardship. It would be wonderful if she could have the publicity that would allow her to bring the plight of these horses and children to light. She is developing a plan in which donors could sponsor either a horse, a child, or both thus providing needed care and services.

Should you have questions or wish for additional information please contact me and I will put you in touch with Barbara. She is truly a person you would be blessed to know.

Thank you for your time.

BRIAN WILSON IS ALIVE AND WELL

Dear Dan,

While it was marvelous to see your party/benefit coverage of the Beach Boys concert in your Sept. 1, 2006 edition, unfortunately, you asserted that "Brian Wilson, as you know, has passed on."

No, I definitely DON'T know that, as the legendary Beach Boys founder, composer, producer & all-round genius is still thankfully Very much alive & with us.

You may be thinking of Brian's deceased brothers, Dennis ["Denny on the drums"], and Carl (Carl & the Passions, "Pacific Ocean Blue") who, sadly, did leave us in the 80s & 90s, respectively.

Brian is very much alive & well, and is even playing a few select concerts this year to mark the 40th anniversary of what is generally considered to be the single greatest LP in the history of rock & roll, the Beach Boys' "Pet Sounds" from 1966.

Capitol Records has just released a deluxe DVD set of "Pet Sounds" also marking the occasion, including various promotional & studio video clips and a fuzzy sleeve package.

Thanks for noting this correction to your Beach Boys piece. While Mike Love and Bruce Johnston carry on the BB name via touring, Brian tours under his own name and has performed complete sets of Pet Sounds & "SMILE" material, to great acclaim, in recent years.

Thanks for noting Brian's continued health & unmatched musical genius.

Strange

A man in Sag Harbor called police to report that somebody had taken his car without permission. The car was later returned to the man. But the drama didn't end there. A day later he called police when he found that somebody had eaten his food and used his shower without permission. Police told the guy to find a new girlfriend.

* * *

Motel Shove

An employee of a motel in Montauk reported that guest pushed him and yelled at him. When police arrived, the man said that he didn't want to press charges, but that he did want an apology. When the shover apologized the situation became calm and police were able to leave without making any arrests. They were really close, however, to sending them both to the principal's office.

Urine

A woman in Sag Harbor called police after she saw a man walk up in front of her house and urinate on her property. Police told the woman that she needed to redesign her house so that it doesn't look so much like a fire hydrant.

Sex Offender

A man in Southampton was arrested after he had failed to register as a sex offender, as required by law for the state. After police arrested the man, they were relieved to have been able to get this guy on something, as most officers in the area were looking for a reason to get this guy off the street.

We are pledged to the letter and spirit of U.S. policy for the achievement of equal housing opportunity throughout the Nation. We encourage and support an affirmative advertising and marketing program in which there are no barriers to obtaining housing because of race, color, religion, sex, handicap, familial status or national origin.

Every musician, every singer, every dancer and actor seen and heard here today, whether performing solo or ensemble, is to be individually thanked. Thanked for dreaming of moments when they can stand before you to entertain, enlighten, and amuse. Thanked for their time sacrificed to hone their skills. Thanked for seeking the arts as their form of expression.

We're all better for their efforts. James V. Zizzi understands labors of love, and his homes stand before you as testament. Which is why James V. Zizzi Contracting is a proud supporter of the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center.
